Pleas for Water Power Permits on Reserves Increases

The district engineer's office of the Inited States forest service is being swamped with waterpower permit applications, all of which must be investi gated and reported on to the waterpower commission for action.

Sixteen of these proposed projects lie in Oregon and Washington, while 29 are in Alaska. With an average of three weeks required for each investigation only the most important ones can be examined this year, said District Engineer P. H. Dater, Dater himself will examine the urgent applications in Oregon and Washington, while a man will probably be assigned to Alaska to spend
