Unusual Beauty In Orpheum Portrayal

By H. E. H. OF UNUSUAL strength and beauty is the portrayal by Howard Hall of the character of Abraham Lincoln in the character of Abraham Lincoln in Thomas Dixon's tabloid drama of stirring events in the life of the great president This headline act of the present Orpheum bill gives the auditor a new and pleasing conception of the idealism and homeliness of the emancipator.

Hall gives to the role a dignity in keeping with Lincoln's memory and quotes Lincoln's stories and famous lines carefully. In appearance his resemblance to portraits of the man who rose from the wilderness to leadership is marvelous.

The remainder of the program is good with but one exception. Directly following the Lincoln sketch comes Frank DeVoe, former comedian with Fritzi Scheff, and Harry Hosford, former pianist with Annette Kellerman. They pianist with Annette Kellerman. They give excerpts from musical comedy. They were probably good in their former roles with their respective stars.

Joseph L. Browning is a cure for the blues with his "A Timely Sermon" and facial contortions. Mabel Cameron, Alan Devitt and C. Carroll Clucas present a bright and entertaining skit, "The Fall of Eve." Buddy Walton, feminine despite the name, has some glever songs despite the name, has some elever songs and impersonations. The Ducos Brothers open with fun, tumbling about the stage while they fiddle. Mijares & Co. close with thrilling tight and slack wire stunts.

Topics of the Day, Kinograms and Jeffery's orchestra complete a bill of more than ordinary interest.
