The program is headed by the captivating, rapidly moving, gayly singing clever and merry, though not tuneful, and by Lew Dockstader, minstrel man. As a vaudeville monologist, Dockstader turns John Barleycorn over in his grave with a degree of success that must be determined by those who like his stuff. Miss Samuels puts a kick into every ninute of her work. She has a radiant personality and the ability to create such a demand for her wares that she is back again and again by audiences that are satisfied only after she tops off a little speech with another song. She sings to the accompaniment of Miss B. Walker at the piano. For the special benefit of fashion followers it might be mentioned incidentally that very little of Miss Samuels' pretty

David Sapirstein should be a feature on the current bill, for he handles his grand plano keyboard in a masterful fashion, without a hint of grandstanding. Ota Gygi, heralded as court vio linist to the king of Spain, may be nominated to serve the court of Orpheum patrons. He appears with Maryon Vadie, danseuse, who is a bit stiff in the knees, but talented and graceful nevertheless.

Paul Morton and Naomi Glass, add materially to the population of the mourners' bench at John B.'s funeral, have turned their mourning into new channels, putting into their act some of the most acceptable stepping seen many moons.

The program opens with Sultan a sleek little pony, showing its "learning" under the direction of Miss Emma B. Lindsay. Sultan knows a lot more than number is presented by the Curzon Sisrain engaged over the Oregon Electric ters, whose aerial act is a novelty that for beauty has had no equal on Portland vaudeville stages this year. The show moves south after the Wednesday matinee.

Holds Much Interest

THE psychological problems involved in the story of Augustus Thomas' famous play, "The Witching Hour." are of never-waning interest and the tensely dramatic situations of the play lose none of their force in the movie adaptation now showing at the Columbia theafrom the bondage of fear and hate and, through its so-called sub-conscious ac-tivities, to obtain knowledge of the thoughts and purposes of other minds, is admirably worked out in the play.

"The Witching Hour" had a long run on the stage and the incidents of the tale are sufficiently familiar to the public. An all star cast and elaborate settings add to the effectiveness of the film version. Every characterization is a masterpiece and the crowded house at the Sunday performance gave ample proof of the popularity of the piece.

A clever comedy film, featuring an educated baboon, lends mirth to the Columbia program and the bill is filled out by a series of wonderful views o Cascade mountain scenes.

For example, the frock at the left, which is decoratively trimmed with interlaced bands of fine lace insertion, distinguishes its kimono-cut sleeves with crossed bands of face to match, and is sufficiently generous of neckline to slip on over the head without the necessity of a snapped or hooked opening. The frock illustrated at the right is rather a departure from the ordinary way of the chemise frock, for it adjusts its fullness under cordings at the hipline and trims its skirt with spiral bands, each one dropping four three-cornered accordion pleated ruffles. The kimono sleeves and deep neckline are also details most worthy of consideration.
