

HEAVY DAMAGE FROM RAIN SMALL, DECLARES NUNN

Salem, Or., May 24.—Little damage to state highways in Eastern Oregon resulted from the heavy rains and high water of the past week, according to Herbert S. Nunn, state highway engineer, and C. E. McCullough, bridge engineer with the highway department, who returned Monday after a week spent in touring the roads of that section of the state. The problem of detours, however, has been increased by the flood situation, the engineers state.

With the completion of the overcrossings of the highway with the tracks of the O-W, R. & N. at Dillon and Big Eddy the line from The Dalles to the Deschutes river bridge is finished. The principal bridges on this section, the engineers explain, are the Deschutes river bridge, which has been in use for several months, and the Seufert viaduct, a reinforced concrete structure about 200 feet long.

The officials inspected the line from Heppner to the Morrow county line, where seven or eight small bridges are in prospect; the line from Heppner to Pilot Rock, where a bridge is under consideration, and the La Grande-Joseph highway, where four or five large bridges will be built, but not this year.

The bridge over the Malheur river at Vale, a 180-foot steel span with timber approaches costing approximately $42,000, is nearing completion and will be ready for traffic in about three weeks. Satisfactory progress is reported on the overcrossing at Huntington, although some delay has been occasioned by reason of the flood which took out some of the false work.
