CAMPAIGN STARTS TO COLLECT TAX FOR 'MOONSHINE'

San Francisco, June 4 .- Local representatives of the internal revenue office will begin activities tomorrow mated $1,750,000 in taxes and penalties from the "moonshine" operators and bootleggers in San Fran-

The United States supreme court in decision Wednesday in the Boze Yuginovich prosecution in Oregon adjudged that the Volstead act repealed all federal statutes in conflict with its provisions, and under that decision the authorities will collect taxes on liquor.

Under the decision of the supreme court, as interpreted today by William G. Walker, chief field deputy of the internal revenue department at San Francisco, he will be able to enforce section 35 of the Voistead act, which provides for penalties from $500 to $1000 against every one of the estimated 3500 moonhiners and bootleggers operating in San Francisco, together with a punitive tax of $12.80 per gallon on all liquor found

OREGON NOT AFFECTED

SAME AS CALIFORNIA decision of the supreme cour Wednesday in the Boze Yuginovich, alias Boze Yuginni, case will not affect the collector of internal revenue office in A. Miller. Oregon collector of internal revenue, has been levying taxes and at-tempting to collect them as soon as the reports have been returned to him from Washington. Since January 1 Miller's office has handled about 100 liquor cases in which close to $200,000 in taxes were Part of these have been collected. Where the taxes were small they were paid, and where the defendant had property it was attached and ordered sold, but in every case so far the property was redeemed before date of sale. In a few cases where the defendant had nothing of value a cash offer in compromise was arranged.

A sample of the taxes levied on a distiller after he is arrested and convicted as shown on the reports of Jesse Flanders, enforcement director for Oregon,

This case involved a large still which had been operated three months and where 30 gallons of moonshine whiskey were found. The amount of mash about the still did not count.

Tax for running a still for three months under internal revenue law, $250; double the above tax under the prohibition law, $500; 25 per cent penalty, $62.50; tax on 30 gallons of whiskey, $384; specific penalty for being a retailer, $500; specific penalty for being a distiller, $1000; tax on retailer for three months, $250; double retailer tax under Volstead act, $500; 25 per cent penalty for retailer, $62.50; retail liquor dealer for three months, $12.50; penalty for not taking out license, $1.56; fine of amount equal to tax for failure to pay tax on liquor, $192; retailer's license for one year (payment of this is forced for one year). $1000: double the license under Volstead act. $2000; 25 per cent penalty, $250; distiller's license for one year, $1000; double the license under the prohibition law, $2000; 25 per cent penalty, $250; retail liquor dealer for one year, $50; 25 per cent penalty, $6.25. Total tax, $10,-271.31.

Hoyt street so that that thoroughfare may be widened. Similarly Fourteenth street is to be widened by the dedication of a 20-foot strip to the city. WOULD EXTEND WAR PLAN

The history of the terminal measure is briefly as follows: During the war under government administration the depot was used by the trains of the Great Northern and S. P. & S. in addition to the trains owning the depot, namely, the Southern Pacific. Northern Pacific and O-W. R. & N. At the end of the railroad administration the Great Northern and S. P. &. S. were notified their trains could no longer use the Union depot. Public protest lowed. Preparations were made by the city and the Oregon public service mission to institute action with the inter state commerce commission.

The railroads then compromised the controversy by agreeing to throw their properties, including a break-up yard in the Guilds lake district, into a Union passenger trains save those of the electric lines using the Union depot, conditioned upon the grant of street vacations ssential to the expansion proposed. A committee composed dent's council of Portland's business and civic clubs, together with the engineers the port and dock commissi the city first negotiated with the railroads, and the tentative agreement, after minor modifications, was approved by the city council in the form submitted to the voters for the election June 7.

The Gildden company says that its business from dealers is showing steady gains and collections are improving. The demand for paint for house painting is said to be satisfactory and while there has been reaction in the demand from the, motor trade the past two weeks business in that line has been heavy thus far. Summing up, the Glidden plants are said to be running about 75 per cent of capacity. Steel business continues quiet with manufacturers working at intervals, just taking care of accumulated orders. Tool manufacturers report a slackening in May over April and they do not as yet see any change for June. The tin can industry shows a falling off in orders. One large vacuum cleaner manufacturer reports sales averaging 90 per cent of 1920 business.
