

PROPERTY OWNERS RENEW PROTEST AGAINST HOSPITAL

Indications point to a stormy session of the city council Wednesday, when it is understood the protestants against the proposed new hospital on the grounds of the Portland sanitarium, East Sixtieth and Belmont street, will reappear after several months of silence.

At this session a resolution will be presented by Commissioner Barbur, providing for the granting of a permit for the proposed building.

PLANS CHANGED
The present sanitarium buildings were erected more than 15 years ago, and about a year ago plans were made for a new, modern fireproof structure. At that time the opposition was strong, but the city council eventually granted the permit.

Because of financial conditions the hospital association was unable to proceed. Now the plans for the building have been modified and the proposed location has been slightly changed. This gives opportunity for the opponents to reopen their protests.

COST REDUCED
One of their main objections, however, was that the old structures would remain on the lands owned by the association. In the new resolution there is a clause which provides that all of the old structures must be demolished.

The original plan provided for a structure that would cost approximately $200,000. The new plans, it is understood, are modified so that the building proposed would not reach this figure.

JUST LIKE GETTING MONEY FROM HOME, DOCTOR OPINES

Think of a man—and a city official—on whom a salary of $350 a month makes so little impression that he forgets to draw a month's warrant for almost one year!

Impossible, say you? Yet there's proof. Dr. George Parrish, city health officer, was notified by the city auditor's office that a month's warrant drawn in his favor had been lying in that office for many months, and they wanted to know whether it was of any interest to him. Parrish finally found time to drop in at the auditor's office and found that he had forgotten to draw his salary of $350 for last July. He'll salt this down for pocket money.

EAST ALDER TO BE RELIEF STREET WHEN IMPROVED

A "relief" street which will be of much importance will be created when Alder street, from East Seventh to Tenth streets, is permanently paved. At present it is surfaced with macadam, but the city engineer has filed the estimates and the city council will authorize advertisement for bids for the paving.

RECORD BUSINESS GRIST IS FACING THE CITY COMMISSION

The largest grist of business to go before the city council at any one session since Portland went under the commission form of government in 1915 appeared today. It would occupy almost eight columns of newspaper space, and is so extensive that the prospects are that there will be daily sessions of the council for the remainder of the week. The bulk of the items are from the public works department, in reference to proposed street improvements or improvements under way.

BAD STRETCH IN GRAND AVE. READY FOR IMPROVEMENT

Action will be taken by the city council Wednesday for the improvement of a stretch of macadam roadway in Grand avenue that has proved an aggravation to motorists for many months. This stretch of macadam was laid on filled land, but it is now sufficiently settled to permit the permanent pavement to be laid. The continuous paved street will be appreciated by the whole southeast district of the city, especially the Sellwood district, for which Grand avenue is a main artery.

ASSIGNMENT OF PLAYGROUND DIRECTORS ARE ANNOUNCED

Assignment of playground directors for the ensuing season was made Monday. Woman directors will be on duty from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m. and the men directors from 1 p. m. to 5 p. m. The assignments are:

Terwilliger, Ruth Wolff and Clement

SHARKEY; Lemla, Ruth Ferguson and K. A. Kreth; Forestry, Ruth Susman and George Wolff; Peninsula, Mrs. Felix Zaveri and F. W. Brodie; Washington, Margaret Vedder and F. E. Harrigan; Mount Tabor, Edith Turner and Signor Grondahl; Mount Scott, Julia C. Harrison and William W. Foster; Brooklyn, Myrtle B. Swallow and Maurice W. Howard; Dunsmuir, Florence K. Fink and David G. Wright; Johnson creek, Edith E. Bynon and Ernest Amburn; Laurelhurst, Mrs. Alfred H. Ehrenliou and Thiel Sullivan; Vernon, Ruth M. Stewart and William E. Coleman; North Park, Natalie Reichart and Gene Richmond; Sellwood, Mrs. William H. Knapp and O. D. Wilkins; Kenilworth, Edna Aspler and Ralph Borrelli; Lincoln, Jewell Tozier and Louis Gallo; Irvington, Dorothy London and J. William Johnson; substitutes, Josephine Goldstaub, Dorothy McKee, Myron Wilsey and H. M. Baird.

WOMAN TO ASK DAMAGES FOR INJURIES TO HER-SON

Mrs. Bertha Edwards, 61 Lombard street, through her attorney, Henry S. Westbrook, has filed with the city auditor notification that she intends to hold the city responsible for injuries sustained by her 3-year-old son, Vernon E. Edwards. She says the lad on June 15 tripped over a water pipe in the parkway at Minnesota and Lombard streets, severely cutting his face on the sharp edges of the pipe, which was not protected against the possibility of injury being placed. She says her son's face is disfigured for life and that he was forced to go to a hospital for treatment.

HIGH WATER INTERFERES WITH CITY PAVING PLANT

While the municipal paving plant has been greatly discommoded by inability to secure a sufficient supply of crushed rock for paving work now in progress, due to high water in the Columbia river, R. S. Dulin, superintendent of the plant, stated today that the prospects are that a supply from the St. Helens quarries may be obtainable by next Tuesday. One of the pressing needs for crushed rock is in connection with the paving of the Morrison street bridge.

POLICE KILL GANG LEADER AT LINNTON

(Continued From Page One)

force hurried to the scene headed by Chief of Police Jenkins and Governor O'Leary, who was visiting Jenkins at the time the call came in. The reserves carried sawed-off shotguns.

POLICE CAPTURE FIVE
The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun in the fight, but had thrown it away when he saw their police officers.

The four patrolmen had caught five of the eight men before the reserves arrived and had accounted for a sixth, who was examined and found to be dead.

At the police station Claf Peterson, 21, admitted that he was a companion of Darrell and admitted that he had discharged his gun