

NEXT WEEK LAST CALL FOR BERRIES

By Hyman H. Cohen

There is more or less talk among many interests of berry prices being down to normal, or below normal figures, but this is scarcely a truth, although the per crate price is practically as low as normal.

The difference in the size of the crate is what makes the present price despite its apparent lowness, somewhat higher than normal. The old style crate of a few years ago contained what was commonly called 24-quart baskets, while the present crate contains 24 pint baskets. The size of the crate is no different but the present baskets have false bottoms while the old style ones were full of fruit.

Nevertheless there has been huge buying of berries for home canning recently and even some of the commercial canners have been operating. Sugar is the cheapest for many years and this, together with a low price on fruit, makes it possible for the housewife to can this season quite reasonably.

If you want to secure the best raspberries, loganberries or currants, next week is the time when stock must be purchased. There will mean poorer fruit and perhaps higher prices. Poor fruit is high at any price.

Try The 20th Century Way of Avoiding Money Troubles

Learn to buy for cash—where the value of money is most respected. You will be surprised at the difference. In the old easy way of "getting trusted" you bought things you did not need, you paid too much for the things you did need; at the end of the month the size of the grocery bill made your heart sink. In the new way, the 20th Century way, you may, if you choose, face the first of the month SQUARE—no grocery bill—you find yourself ahead instead of behind. It starts a good habit.

The Morrison bridge is closed to autos but is open to street car passengers and pedestrians. Hundreds and hundreds of Eastsiders as well as Westsiders find it well worth while to use the other bridges and shop at Jones. The distance by machine is not much greater and the savings will more than offset the slight inconvenience.

Plenty of room to park your cars with no time restrictions. We give quick service.
