Polly's Portland a-Shopping goes

"There's one girl," said Patricia the other day, "who is positively the most fascinating thing in this entire city, and it's every bit a matter of clothes. She's just pretty enough to be easy to look at and I even doubt if you'd feel her charm if it wasn't for the fact that every time you see her she impresses you as being a different person. And at last I discovered how she did it. You may see her at ten in the morning, digging around in her garden with the most boyishly fetching overalls on and at one o'clock she is the typical sportswoman lurching at the country club. She's rather sophisticated then and has added several years to her appearance. Then at four in the afternoon she is undeniably French in her beautifully dark tailored suit and has the interesting air of a woman of the world. And just when you have begun to notice this fact, she saunters across your horizon in a guileless frock of white organdy sashed in blue." Ever thought of giving yourself variety in this manner?

Gold to match the wearer's frock, round to suit the lovely charm of her face, and light because it is summer was a little felt hat with a matching feather that curled believably over the cheek of a little Miss that I saw yesterday.

There are such delightful new innovations in wedding announcements. So varied are the designs that the little card can choose one that matches up with her individuality. And for this highest event of her life, the Irwin Hodson Company can assure her of the height of perfection in the quality of her stationery and a lovely touch of finish in her engravings. 387 Washington street.

There are three angles of visiting the Powers Furniture Store this week. The charm of a newly loved piece of furniture is forgotten, and you purchase this charm in the lovely Jacobean dining room sets and the lovely tapestried davenport and chairs that they are making a special showing of out and they are ready to meet you in the cost of things, it is quite a point to note that the reputation for quality of these sets is really greater than one usually receives in a sale. And with it all, the most important thing that has happened at a very smart dance recently was a frock of black chiffon banded in silver. The wide grey belt was very full over the hips and the hem-line fell below the ankles.

There are so many delightful things about a cape. It will wrap around you warmly, or flutter behind you coolly, and it is equally successful at serving as a background for your dress. It is a good point to envelop one in order to conceal the bad ones.

Tired a bit by the years she has spent in caring for her babies-in-strings, the mother of today is a day. And somehow, even when they are grown men and women, she still finds that every moment of her day is filled—and so she goes on, always, always, always. Then comes the day when her children, realizing how precious she is to them, always, always, always. Baby's first clothes

July 16.—HOW MY FINGERS TREMBLED when I untied the box! There were first, the bath supplies that I put away in the top drawer of the dear little wardrobe that Tom got yesterday. Not a thing was omitted—there was a cake of pure castile soap, scented with lavender, and a box of boric acid, a can of finest baby talcum powder, a bottle of olive oil, a jar of vaseline, and a package of medicated absorbent cotton. Then there was the softest cotton receiving blanket, the first thing that is to touch my baby! Two soft Turkish knit bath towels, three little blue edged wash cloths, and a large blanket of the same material, edged all the way 'round in blue! And the cunningest little quilted pad! Even the baby's little bassinet has not been forgotten—a fine piece of rubber sheeting, and a double wool fleeced crib blanket with dainty stripes and cunning blue ribbon binding! I put these things all away, as there is nothing to do but use them when the time comes. Tom came home just then and took me out for a drive.
