

STATUS OF BONUS MEASURE CLOUDED WITH UNCERTAINTY

Washington, July 27.—(WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE JOURNAL).—What has happened to the soldier bonus bill? The record shows that upon demand of the president it was sent back to the senate committee on finance without instructions. A motion to instruct the committee to return it for action by the first day of next January received only seven votes. The important question was the country is whether or not it is to be considered again in the near future.

In well informed circles here the opinion prevails that the cabinet has been permanently entombed. Senator Penrose says the bill is to have further consideration. Senator Kenyon says he hopes it will come back a better bill. Senator Reed and Senator Borah insisted that there is no likelihood of early revival of the measure, because the logic of President Harding's and Secretary Mellon's objections calls for a long, long wait.

SENATOR McNARY'S BILL

Senator McNary and his western colleagues interested in reclamation believe that conditions are rapidly working around to assure the success of the McNary bill, and this, in the view of the Oregon senator, is one of the big things for the ex-service man. He has calculated that out of 20,000,000 acres which it is planned to reclaim, the soldiers will have preference right of settlement for 15,000,000 acres.

The pressure of the soldier organizations, as they understand this and realize the conditions resulting from administration opposition to the bonus bill will be exerted for the reclamation bill, Mr. McNary maintains, and he predicts it will go through at the regular session. He regards this as the "best bet" for the soldiers, perhaps along with a revised bill for insurance and forms of home aid.

STORM HITS CAPITAL

The final flurry in the senate on the bonus bill was one of the most spectacular that has been witnessed for years. The senate chamber was torrid in heat, and while the superheated senators tossed epithets the lightning flashed outside, thunder roared and the rain beat down upon the heavy glass roof in such torrents that the wordy disputants could only be heard as they brought their voices to a shout.

It was in this dramatic setting that Senator McNary issued a challenge to Senator Reed to "step outside," which in the state of the weather, did not sound enticing. Whereupon, the fiery, squeaky-voiced senator from Georgia, shook his fist at McNary, reproached the posturers for "killing the bill by cowardice" and demanded that McNary "sit down." Reed, speaking deliberately and looking over to McNary, said he "never yet knew a blackguard who did not want to go outside to settle."

COOLIDGE LOSES CONTROL

Husky "Joe" Robinson of Arkansas moved up from between the word-battlers, evidently ready to stop any physical hostilities. Vice President Coolidge, presiding, lost control of the senate and the galleries as well as the excitement swayed up from the floor. McNary was heard through the din insisting that he had the floor. Several times he repeated it.

"Talk about all you have got," shouted Watson.

"Won't this senator speak louder?" called Robert of Arizona, a wily, that set the senate and galleries laughing. The tumult of the elements, the senators and the galleries together made a rare scene for the staid old senate.

At last it ended with some soothing assurance by McNary that he really meant no challenge of Reed's veracity and the vocal impact relaxed into a parliamentary wrangle. In the course of which McNary succeeded in completing his interrupted speech, in which he sought to convey new assurance to the soldiers that the bill will at some favorable time be reported once more.

Kenyon made the motion to instruct the committee to return the bill by January 1, 1922. One seemed to take that motion very seriously. It received the votes of Kenyon himself, Kendrick of Wyoming, McNary and Stanfield of Oregon, Shortridge of California, Harris of Georgia and Willis of Ohio.

Most contradictory reasons were given by senators for their votes for and against the bill.

McNary was against recommitment because he wanted the bill voted on and passed.

Kenyon was for recommitment so a "better bill" could be returned.

Borah was for recommitment because he is against the bill and believed this would kill it.
