

DAMAGING CLEWS
PILE UP AGAINST ARTHUR C. BURCH

Suspect in Kennedy Murder is Said to Have Had Gun When He Left Illinois for Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Aug. 13.—Arthur C. Burch faced new damaging evidence tonight.

This is the circumstantial evidence that the case ministered to the son, who, together with his platoon pal, Madalynne Obenchain, is charged with killing J. Belmont Kennedy.

—The shotgun believed to have dealt death to the wealthy Kennedy was found by Roy and Bert Meoney, who stumbled over it in the surf at Ocean Park, 12 miles from Beverly Glen. The gun was believed thrown in the ocean after Kennedy was shot.

—H. M. Bartlett, Evanston, Ill., informed authorities Burch had a gun in his luggage when he left for Los Angeles in answer to the call of Madalynne.

—Mrs. James Warren, wife of a banker, said she had seen Burch on his way to the coast and he told her he was "going to Los Angeles to see that a certain party treats a friend of mine right and if he doesn't I'll get him."

MONEY, NOT LOVE

Money, not love or even platonie friendship, was the motive for Arthur C. Burch's response to Madalynne's appeal that he come to Los Angeles, according to the latest theory being considered by the authorities.

Since Burch's arrest the authorities have been consistently working to ascertain what interest he had that was strong enough to have led him to come to Los Angeles at Madalynne's beck and call and to explain his willingness to aid her in her admitted efforts to get Kennedy to "do the right thing" and marry her.

Burch, it is believed, knew as a friend, of Madalynne's trouble with Kennedy.

Madalynne has admitted that she frequently loaned money to Burch. The present theory being worked on by the police is to the effect that Burch, knowing that his moving picture business in Chicago was about to go on the rocks, answered Madalynne's appeal largely for the purpose eventually of borrowing money from her with which to meet his obligations in Chicago and put his business on its feet again.

SAYS IT WAS LOAN

A letter addressed Madalynne from Burch on the morning of her arrest and his precipitate departure from Chicago contained the following: "I have given the authorities, when questioned regarding it, that it was the return of some money she had lent him and that she had frequently had transactions of this sort with him before. According to the present theory, Burch, knowing of Madalynne's arrest, immediately following the murder at the Chicago club, left the city either because he feared she might need it or because he feared to have money in his possession she might admit to the authorities she had loaned him preceding the shooting of Kennedy."

Burch's record at Northwestern University, now in possession of the authorities, as well as his record since he left college, is said to have been one of scheming for money, rather than for devotion of love, which are the motives which have come into the mind of the frequently advanced for his strange connection with the case.
