

BEDTIME STORIES

There is nothing strange in the fact that parents as well as children delight in the Peter Rabbit bedtime stories that appear each day in The Journal. The little fables are so humanly appealing, so entertainingly told that they gain interest at the bedtime hour from all the family.

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the Library association held Monday night, William L. Brewster was elected treasurer to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of R. L. Sabin, who leaves the board because of his duties as a member of the tax supervision and conservation commission.

The directors also considered a communication from Albert E. Doyle, architect, regarding the proposed memorial to Mary Frances Leam, and Doyle was requested to continue his efforts to secure a suitable design for a tablet.

Arrest Made for Big Silk Theft

Chicago, Aug. 24.—(I. N. S.)—A police raid park loiterers here today resulted in the arrest of John D. West, wanted for the alleged theft of $35,000 in silk from Montgomery, Ward & Co., in Chicago and Kansas City. West was formerly a department manager for the company in Kansas City, police said.

"Bill" Hart Is Strong in New Film

MOTION picture patrons may well regret that William Hart has determined to quit the silver screen after giving to his art such entertaining bits of drama as "The Whistle," which is spending the week at the Liberty theatre. Human interest has been given wide scope in Hart's latest film.

The story, which is the work of May Winthorn and Olin Lyman, presents the famous star as a factory worker, a man of big muscle and red blood and hard heart. The hardness of heart is attributed to the fact that mercenary employer declines to safeguard dangerous shafting in his plant, thus causing the death of the only son of Hart, who impersonates Robert Evans.

Hart's hardness, then, is understandable when he refuses his employer's child when he utters the death of an accidental leap into the river. Hart keeps the rescue secret for five years, meanwhile rearing the lad to a life of labor, which ceases when the whistle blows. But another accident throws the child back into the arms of his mother, ignorant of his identity. Love and kindness are shown upon the child until Hart, remorseful at last, gives up his plan and the child he has learned to idolize, to his mother.

A powerfully dramatic scene is that in which Hart reveals to the child's father that he has been rearing him as a laborer. The plan for a lively campaign to get the law for fitting punishment.

MOOMAW PHOTOGRAPHS STORM KING'S RAMPAGE

Lewis Moomaw, the director of "The Golden Trail," the one big successful Oregon-made photoplay, is responsible for the photography in the Screenland news reel at the Columbia theatre which this week depicts an unusual hail and sleet storm up the Columbia river. Beautiful cloud effects have been caught and while no color photography has been used, the pictures by night and in shadow strikingly portray contrasting moods of the storm king and his opponent, the sun. Zack Moseby is responsible for the titles which accompany the picture.

Peggy Joyce Gone After Plunger Has Night of Good Luck

Deauville, Aug. 24.—(U. P.)—Peggy Joyce gave Deauville its post-season sensation.

After a mad dash to get here before the season closed, Peggy appeared dramatically in the Baccarat rooms, stunning in a strikingly scant gown of hose crepe de chine. Two enormous ropes of pearls, a huge diamond necklace and jewelry, which brought envy from other women who themselves were used to the finest gems.

Sir John Seasons, the king of Deauville plungers, insisted that the late vision that was Peggy be at once introduced, and when he turned again to the tables he won a half million francs in the evening's play.

After the sold grey dawn had driven the last gambler from the rooms and the Deauville season was officially declared closed, the mystery of "where is Peggy?" began.

She could not be found at the hotel Normandy, where she had been staying, and later the hotel said she had left without giving any address.

Ordinance Permits Two-hour Parking On North Broadway

Relief was granted the automobile men and accessory dealers of North Broadway by the city council Tuesday afternoon when it amended the traffic ordinance to allow two-hour parking instead of half-hour parking between Ankeny street and the Broadway bridge.

This action was taken to allow patrons of the automotive industry to transact business, complaint having been made that the half-hour limit would make this impossible, especially when minor repairs or installation work is required which could not be completed within the limited period allowed by the original ordinance.

The council, however, prescribed that this amended privilege be restricted to the hours prior to 4 p. m. after which until 6 a. m. all parking is prohibited.

The council also approved the plans of the Oregon Automobile Terminal association for a building at Park and Yamhill streets, which is to be 75 by 75 feet in dimensions, with a driveway around the entire structure. The building is to cost $25,000 and be the terminal for all stage lines operating in the city, thus taking the stages off the congested streets.

The scheme worked, all right, but the wrong person was the victim. Sacco's son John, 15 years old, went into the patch to pick beans for his mother, not knowing of the trap. He received the shock, but was able to be about Tuesday night, after the excitement had died down. The elder Sacco will be questioned by the police.

Charges Wires to Keep Out Thieves; His Son Is Victim

Frank Sacco, 941 East Grant street, street cleaner on the night shift, planned an ingenious device to rid his garden of thieves. He suspected some of the neighbors of the nightly invasions which has been depriving him of his garden produce and planned a shock for them. He stretched wires through the patch and through a switch in his barn provided for turning on electric current when the thieves appeared. Before going to work Tuesday night he turned on the switch, setting the trap for the invaders.

The scheme worked, all right, but the wrong person was the victim. Sacco's son John, 15 years old, went into the patch to pick beans for his mother, not knowing of the trap. He received the shock, but was able to be about Tuesday night, after the excitement had died down. The elder Sacco will be questioned by the police.

LEGIONNAIRES TO MEET

Springfield, Or., Aug. 24.—The American Legion will meet Friday evenings in its hall for handling the soldiers' and sailors' state aid bill preliminaries.

DRESS

A Youthful Dance Frock

Youth, at least, may rejoice in the quaint whimsy of the mode to delve into the past rather than into the future for inspiration. The slender grace of those fortunate young people of 14 to 20 need not fear the favor shown the snug blouses and exaggerated skirts, for, like the ladies of imperial France, that slim waist is an asset which fashion has long neglected. So testifies this picturesque frock of taffeta and frills, which has a becoming Eugenie neckline and diminutive sleeve. The skirt billows out from the low waistline into deep, curved scallops, with only a rose-weighted ribbon to confine it. Placed ruffles also edge these scallops, and between them peer the metal tissue petticoat. What more could a youthful heart desire for a dance frock?
