

SCHOOL DAYS
The holiday season is ended—at least it will be when the echo of shouts from lusty young lumps on Tuesday morning announces the return of school days. The spirit of school days is admirably caught in a full page color illustration in The Sunday Journal magazine section.

"THREE WEEKS"
That notable contribution to English fiction aroused a deluge of interest, and now, its author, Miss Edith Glyn, has been silent until now in her own defense. That defense is being written for a feature of The Sunday Journal magazine next Sunday.

NEW FACULTY MAN NAMED
University of Oregon, Eugene, Sept. 2.—A new member of the faculty of the department of rhetoric of the University of Oregon will be Willie Nelson Collins, formerly head of the department of English at the University of Idaho, with the United States shipping board for the greater part of the time following the outbreak of the war and a deputy commissioner for the American Red Cross in Europe for a time.
No one had. Everybody became very grave at once. "His home was right down there," said Peter.
"Then I am afraid I will never see him again," said Welcome Robin, and his voice was very sad.
"Poor little Striped Chipmunk! He must have been killed by the lightning. How we will miss him," added Tommy Tit the Chickadee.
"Everybody loved him," added Jenny Wren. "Poor Striped Chipmunk!"

Miss Ruth Eliot Becomes Bride At 4 O'clock

By Helen Hutchison
THE marriage of Miss Ruth Elliott and Mr. Edward Houghton Prentiss was an event of 4 o'clock today at the Church of Our Father (Unitarian). The bride is a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. G. Elliot. The service was read by Dr. Elliot, father of the bride, assisted by her grandfather, Dr. T. L. Elliot. Miss Clara Elliot, sister of the bride, was chosen as her maid of honor and Miss Mignon Elliot, daughter of Mr. Willard Elliot, as bridesmaid. Mr. W. G. Elliot III was best man. The wedding march was played by Mr. Ralph W. Hoyt and the choir of the church, which includes Mrs. Mittleme Fraker Stites, Mrs. Hooke, Mr. J. Ross Fargo and Mr. Walter Hardwick, sang the bridal hymn preceding the ceremony. An informal reception followed the ceremony in the chapel. Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss will make their home on a ranch near Vancouver, Wash.

Teachers' College of Siberia Seeks Aid From U. of O.

University of Oregon, Eugene, Sept. 2.—The teachers' college of the Far Eastern Republic has written the University of Oregon asking aid in the way of educational matter and money. This college, founded in 1917, is located in Vladivostok, Siberia, and is the only school in Eastern Siberia which trains high school teachers.
On account of the critical condition of the government, which supports the college, funds are not available for the construction of buildings and laboratories, the president of the college said in his letter.
The University of Oregon can give no help in a financial way, but all available literature about courses and administration have been sent the college, as well as copies of university publications. In return for any aid that may be given, the Teachers' college promises to send plant, geological and other specimens from Siberia and Russia.

Methodists Propose "Mutual Athletics" As Dance Substitute

(By Universal Service)
Chicago, Sept. 2.—"Mutual athletics" but not dancing may find favor in the Methodist church, according to Dr. C. H. McCrea, assistant editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate.
The doctor admitted the young folks ought to have some sort of amusement and entertainment.
Recently the American Dancing Masters offered the Methodists a dance known as the "Wesleyan." It was to be stepped in a stately 4-4 measure and provided less physical contact than a church bander grab bag. But the elders would not permit.
"Since the dancing masters have given up trying to introduce dancing in the church, now let the Methodists reform dancing by giving some form of mutual athletics that will take its place," said Dr. McCrea.
The doctor was not ready to explain just what he means by "mutual athletics."

Last Half Bill At Hipp Has Interest

WITH the exception of a few dull spots, and they are mighty few, the Hippodrome bill for the last half of this week, which opened at that theatre Thursday, is equally as entertaining as any that has been seen recently.
The photoplay, "The Road to London," is unusual in that Bryant Washburn, a thoroughly American star, has gone to England for his atmosphere and has produced a play amid English settings that is quite out of the ordinary.
The opening act of the bill is "Ship! Raymond, a clown whose pantomimic work is clever. It is in no way an unusual act, but it still gets plenty of laughs. Gene and Katherine King offer "Miss of Smiles," an act with a wallop of singing and a lot of rapid fire repartee.
Although Jimmy Rosen is not billed as the headliner of the show, his act, "Call Me Papa," was leading the bill of the performance. Jimmy is a diminutive little fellow, just about half as tall as the actor who has the role of his wife in the act, but he is a clever actor and he puts his part over with great credit to himself and with many laughs from his audience.
A wop act is offered by Granville and Fields, and the best thing in it is the dancing of the woman member of the team. Her eccentric dancing is quite the best that has been offered at the Hippodrome this season, and while most of their act is devoted to comedy chatter, her dancing is of such quality as to make up for anything the comedy lacks.
An act entitled "Mixtures" concludes the bill. There are a couple of clever dancers who go over big, and one chap who is supposed to be a waiter but whose role would not be easily recognized unless he told the audience about it, is really a dancer of no mean talent. Plainly something lacking about this act. It has youth and beauty, a very handsome setting, but for some reason it is like a meal without salt.

DRESS

Daytime Costume

The truth of the adage that a thing is never truly appreciated until it threatens to leave is proved by the steadfast loyalty with which smart women cling to the chemise frock. In spite of its continued vogue, there is an unrelenting sprinkling of the straight-lined chemise frock in all the newer collections, and for the daytime costume for street wear they are still the most prominent type. The model illustrated above is of the comfortable, slip-on kind, and is much enhanced by the clever slashes and a discreet use of Polish native embroidery in red and orange worsted.

Escape the "Stout" Class
An attractive figure is not a matter of size but of correct proportions. The stout women who are never spoken of as a "stout" are those who give a little time and thought to proper corseting.
Rengo Belt Reducing Corsets give the wearer an appearance of slenderness. The exclusive Rengo Belt feature gives strength and support where the greatest strain falls—over the abdomen and hips. They have the reputation of being "the most economical reducing corsets ever devised."

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

By Thornton W. Burgess
Who wait the pleasant things to say
Dull auditors' gone away?
—Striped Chipmunk.
NEVER will the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows forget that great storm. Never will the little folk of the Old Orchard forget it. It seemed as if Old Mother Nature had done her best to show how great is her strength. Some of the little feathered folk were nearly drowned by the great rain. Some were so beaten by the wind that they were bruised and sore all over.
Peter Rabbit, over in the dear Old Briar Patch, had sought shelter in an old house of Grandfather Chuck's in the very middle of the Old Briar Patch, and there he and little Mrs. Peter discovered that his feet were wet. Then they found that water was running down the long wall into that old house underground. It was running so hard that the earth couldn't soak it up fast enough, and so water was standing on the surface and some of this was running down under their feet. It made them nervous and uncomfortable. Never had such a thing happened before.
"It must be a terrible storm," said Peter.
Little Mrs. Peter nestled close to him. "I'm so glad you are here, Peter," she whispered. "If you were off somewhere I would be worried to death."
Just as soon as the storm was over Peter was out, eager to see or hear what had happened during the storm. The first thing he discovered was that much of Farmer Brown's corn had been beaten down flat.
"My, my, my!" exclaimed Peter "My, my, my, that is too bad!"
Then the way being clear, he ran over to the Smiling Pool. Peter's eyes opened it very wide when he came in sight of the Smiling Pool. It was doing its best to smile, but it was too muddy to make that smile a success. And the Smiling Pool had grown! My, how it had grown! It was filled to the very top of its banks. No big green lily pads for Grandfather Frog to sit on were to be seen. They were under water. The Laughing Brook was roaring instead of laughing; roaring as it did in early spring when the snow melted.

"It must be a terrible storm," said Peter.

No one to talk to was to be seen, so Peter turned and headed for the Old Orchard. He could hear excited voices over there and he just had to know what had happened there. He found all the feathered folk very much excited. On the ground were many branches from the apple trees. Bully and English Sparrow and Mrs. Bully had lost their homes. It had been in a hollow dead branch which had been snapped off and now lay on the ground split wide open. "It is a wonder we are alive," cried Bully for the hundredth time. "We were in there when it happened. And when we got out we were nearly drowned."
"It is a pity they were not quite drowned," muttered Jenny Wren to Mr. Wren. "You know no one loves Bully and Mrs. Bully."
But the worst damage was to the maple tree beside the old stone wall, the one which had been struck by lightning. Everybody, including Peter, went to look at that and at the hole the lightning had made in the ground just beneath and into which some of the stones of the old wall had fallen. Suddenly Peter thought of Striped Chipmunk's home had been right near there. "Has any one seen Striped Chipmunk?" he asked anxiously.
