

THRIFT PLAN LURES MANY

The stream of depositors taking advantage of The Journal's thrift campaign to open savings accounts at the Lumbermen Trust company bank severely taxed the clerical staff of the bank Thursday afternoon. The thrift idea is proving popular with all ages and classes.

The popularity of The Journal's thrift campaign is attracting hundreds of new depositors to the savings department of the Lumbermen Trust company bank. The steady stream of new patrons reached its maximum Thursday afternoon, when the throng of new depositors threatened to swamp the clerical staff of the bank. The impulse to start a savings account may easily be urged by a premium offer, but The Journal's plan goes further than that and proposes to establish the habit of thrift by making the reward contingent upon regular deposits over a six months period. Cut out the coupon below and join the ranks of the money savers.

Accompanying the coupon must be a receipt or label, showing that the applicant for the account is a subscriber to The Journal, and an initial deposit of at least 50 cents. If additional deposits are made each week for a period of six months $1 will be credited to the account; or, if deposits are made each month for six successive months following the first deposit, 75 cents will be credited to the account; or if three additional deposits are made during the six months 50 cents will be credited to the

BURGESS' BEDTIME STORIES

What Happened When the Little Apple Fell
By Thornton W. Burgess
A little thing we do not see
May change the world for you or me.
—Striped Chipmunk.
BLACK PUSSY had waited patiently for a very long time in the hot sun, waiting without making a move for the tip of her tail, close to the little round hole in the middle of the path on one side of the Old Orchard. She had felt sure that if only she were patient enough she would come out of that little round hole. Now the patience in Black Pussy's yellow eyes gave place to a look of eager fierceness, the tip of her tail twitched more than ever, the sharp claws of her front paws came out of hiding and she made ready for a sudden spring. Her ears had caught just the faintest of sounds, but she knew what they meant. They meant that Striped Chipmunk was running along the little path underground and in just a second or two he would pop out of that little round hole. Now, Striped Chipmunk seldom is heedless. He knows that he is in the cause of much trouble and not infrequently costs some one his life. So Striped Chipmunk has always made it a point to look before he leaps. But this particular time he forgot. Or if he didn't forget he was in too much of a hurry to be careful, which was quite as likely. Anyway, instead of looking just his nose and eyes out for a look all around to see that all was safe, as is his rule, he scrambled up to that little round doorway and popped out.

Several things happened just then, but the most important thing was the falling of a certain little apple from a certain branch high above the path. Weakly cased by a little worm in its heart, it cased just that instant, that particular instant, to let go its hold on the branch and drop. Down it fell straight and true and landed—where do you think? Right smack on the head of Black Pussy just as she started to spring on Striped Chipmunk! Yes, sir, that is just what happened!

Thump! That certain little apple, wherein lived a certain little worm, landed on the head of Black Pussy just as she started to spring. For just a second she lost sight of Striped Chipmunk and instead it seemed to her as if she saw ever so many little stars. And, of course, she missed that spring. When she could see clearly again Striped Chipmunk was running for the old stone wall as fast as his legs could take him. With a snarl Black Pussy was after him. But she was too late. Yes, sir; she was too late. Striped Chipmunk whisked out of sight down between the stones of the old path and from the safety of the hiding place called her every day, taking her could think of. My, how he did scold! Black Pussy looked all about to see what had hit her. Her head ached and she was frightened. She suspected that her master, Farmer Brown's Boy, had discovered what she was doing and had Brown's Boy was nowhere to be seen. Nobody was to be seen. The Old Orchard was as quiet and peaceful as ever it had been. A certain little apple lay close beside the path, but little apples were lying all about on the ground and Black Pussy didn't even look at this certain little apple. She growled at Striped Chipmunk and then turned and sneaked away in a hurry toward Farmer Brown's barn.

Striped Chipmunk came out on the old stone wall and watched her go. And all the time he scolded as only he and his cousin, Chatterer the Red Squirrel, can. And over in that certain little apple a certain little worm went on eating and eating and never guessed that he had saved the life of Striped Chipmunk. And Striped Chipmunk never guessed it either. It is often that way in this Great World.

prepared a ruling which refuses the petition of the Pennsylvania that it be allowed to treat with its 23,500 employees without meeting federated shop craft officials, it was learned today. That the road may refuse to abide by such a decision was intimated by utterance of its officials and by its petition to the board, which went so far as "insisting" that it be granted the right to deal directly with its employees instead of "outside" labor officials.

Added significance was given this attitude by the fact that the Pennsylvania for months has been fighting the battle of all the roads before the board. The way for the Pennsylvania to violate a ruling of the board is easy, as there is no penalty for violating of the board's edicts, members of the organization have said. Public opinion will be the deciding factor—the court of appeals over the railroad board, according to one railroad official. The statement of Elisha Lee, vice president of the Pennsylvania, was considered significant: "Under no circumstances can we honorably pursue the course dictated by the railroad board."

Be Careful What You Wash Your Hair With

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much of which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle. The best thing to use is Mulsified coconut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, even, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy. The hair dries quickly and easily. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.
