

HEAD OF COLLEGE IS ACCUSED OF ATTACKING WOMAN

Charged with assaulting Mrs. Morris Ross, formerly Miss Addie L. Ritter, leaving her black and blue and bruised, C. V. Crumley, head of the Crumley Business college of Portland and a business college in Tacoma, was arrested Wednesday night and taken to the county jail.

The cash bail of $2500 set by the court could not be raised, as the banks had closed, and Crumley was forced to spend the night in jail. Charles A. Ritter of Tacoma, father of the girl, and Frank Ritter of Portland, a brother, are alleged to have threatened to kill Crumley, and Elton Watkins, the accused man's attorney, is said not to have been very anxious to secure his client's release because of this.

Crumley was nervous and broken down when visited by newspaper reporters Wednesday night. He is about 40 years old. The woman is 27.

WANTS HIS MISTRESS

"My business will go to ruin—my home will be broken up," Crumley lamented. His wife—he has no children—is in Tacoma taking care of the business college there.

"I love her, and there is nothing to this," he declared. "It's all a trumped up charge to get money out of me."

In answer to a question, however, he said that he hadn't been asked for money thus far.

The affair took place in Crumley's apartment at Fourteenth and Columbia streets.

According to Mrs. Ross, she was a student under Crumley in the Lincoln high school, Tacoma, in 1913. Her sister is now attending his college in Tacoma. He sat down beside her when she was coming to Portland from Tacoma last Sunday, she said, and after they had chatted for a time he invited her to have dinner with him, which she did.

They arrived in Portland at 3:30, according to her story, and she told Crumley that she was going to her aunt's place on the east side.

OFFERED HER RIDE

"If you will get into my car while I drive to my apartment," Crumley is alleged to have said, "I'll drive you over to your aunt's later."

Mrs. Ross said she consented and that when they arrived at the apartment, Crumley said:

"Come upstairs for a moment while I get some things."

According to the girl, when they were inside the apartment Crumley started the phonograph and then began cleaning up the rooms, removing the "things" she had gotten muddled up with the family away so long. Several times, she said, she called to him when he was in the other room, asking when they were going.

Finally, she said, she declared she was going. Then, according to her story, he locked the door and told her:

"You're going to stay here."

FOUGHT LONG TIME

"And then we fought," she declared, in telling her version to John Mowry, special agent in the district attorney's office. "If someone like hours, struggled all I could. Finally everything went black and I didn't know any more until I woke up on the bed."

When she awoke she was almost nude, she said, and Crumley was bending over her. She was hysterical.

"Now, this mustn't get out; no one must know about it," Crumley is alleged to have said.

Mrs. Ross claims that when she refused to promise that she wouldn't tell he wouldn't let her out of the room. In desperation she at last promised, she said. When she was dressed she left the apartment, wandering the streets for some time in a dazed, hysterical condition.

She failed to tell her aunt about the affair because they were not on good terms, but Monday evening took the train to Tacoma and immediately told her father.

The father telephoned to the girl's brother, Frank Ritter, and directed him to swear to a complaint against Crumley. He was told that the district attorney's office could not act unless the girl came in person, so Wednesday morning, when the district attorney's office opened, the girl, her father and brother were waiting, swearing vengeance against Crumley.

TELLS DIFFERENT STORY

The accused man's story is entirely different, however, and he told it without hesitation, except for his nervousness and the difficulty of speech under the strain.

He said that he did not remember ever having met Mrs. Ross until six weeks ago. Ten days ago, he said, through the business college employment bureau, he secured a position for the girl in Portland.

"I did not even know that she had left the position until I met her on the train coming from Tacoma," he said. "About 50 miles from Portland I saw her on the car and sat down beside her. Later we had dinner together."

"She told me that she had been with her divorced husband in Tacoma and that she had been drinking," she said she did not want to go to her aunt's place because they would find out she had been drinking and then that she had been with her former husband. They were going to remarry, she said, but didn't want her folks to know it until the first of January. I could smell the liquor on his breath."

WENT TO APARTMENT

"When we reached Portland, I told her she shouldn't go to her aunt's in that condition and that it would do her good to come to my apartment and have a cup of black coffee. She did, but when she got there she wouldn't leave. I told her to a number of times, but she finally got into bed and said she wouldn't go. Crumley admitted going into the bedroom later, but denied any violence and said no real improprieties had been committed."

"I lay down on a divan in the other room."

Crumley said Mrs. Ross did not leave until morning and that she left just as soon as she wanted to.

"If there had been a fight," he asked, "wouldn't it have awakened the people in the other apartments?"

Dr. H. P. Fleckenstein examined Mrs. Ross Wednesday on orders of the district attorney's office and is said to have reported that she was badly bruised on the hips and waist and that she had lacerations.

"High Hat" Bandit Captured; Salem's "Lovers' Lane" Free

Salem, Oct. 13.—Alfred Fox, 19, arrested in Albany, Tuesday, has confessed to being the "high hat" bandit who robbed four different couples in North Salem, during the past two weeks, according to Chief of Police Moffitt.

The bandit, who seemed to make a specialty of young couples out for evening strolls, is said to have netted approximately $15 out of his four holdups. Fox is held in the city jail on a charge of robbery, armed with a dangerous weapon. When arrested he is said to have had a .25 caliber revolver, a blue bandana handkerchief with eyeholes cut therein, and a large crowned hat, which would easily pass for a sombrero in the dark.

Pronounce Name of This Crab, Take It

Newport, Oct. 13.—Lothlothodes foraminat St. is the name given by Dr. F. W. Weymouth of Stanford university to a new "stone" crab from the depths of the Pacific, owned by Dr. Walter M. Berry. This species of crab is often erroneously called a king crab, according to Dr. Weymouth.
