STARS twinkle in every corner of the flashes of wit emblazon the whole zenith, down the anticipated attendance some.

Topping the bill is Juanita Hansen, the well known screen star, who ap-pears in person. She is demure in her ragged dress, the one she wore when she played the star part in the "Lost City"; she tells how she expected to be fitted out in fine togs, in her film part, only to receive a sartorial shock, when bundled into less than commonplace togs and made to paint her face with black stuff to make her look like a real Zulu maiden. Snatches of the film story are flashed on the screen prior to her are flashed on the screen prior to her appearance in the flesh, and her jungle stunts the while are explained in a most ludricrous manner by Will Morrisey, headliner in the film business. He was originally billed for a monologue.

Ann Suter, the girl with the Southern personality, sings three or four catchy ongs, her gowns fitting the selections, and the gowns and millinery, by the way, are a show in themselves. Her impersonation of the widow, and the song 'Auld Lang, Syne" captivate. THOSE foreigners will have to put more into their pictures if they hope in the United States. It takes more than he wildcat Pola Negri, with her vesicatory love, and a beyy of Teutonic harem women to enthuse chema patrons on this side of the Atlantic. At that, "One Arabian Night," at the Columbia this week, is not so bad. After viewing it one goes away with the impression that if a good director would get the cast together for a retake and do all over again it might be a real thriller, after all. Calorific Pola Negri is a generous star, not because she reveals so much of her body, but in her literally giving away of long strips of film to others in the cast. One other young woman runs a close second in vivacity, and if with most American stars she would make them appear as animated as fence

Economists and reformers would find much material in the travel pictorial showing a Maori village. There were no idle rich here. The chief was the best wood carver in town, and everyone did something, if it was only to dance. A platoon of the village belies staged a nula with the zeal of the harem beauties in the Arabian picture, and, for heavyweights, showed lots of speed.

We got another thrill when the society editor climbed into an airplane in the Portland pictorial, Screenland News, and we also became convinced of the benefit of short skirts. She never would have been able to get aboard if she had to drag long skirts with her. .

New York-How do they get the effect? It's easy if you know how it is made. That was what a silk manufacturer told his companion as they ratched the woman in front of them at the theater put on her hat at the end of the performance. It was an evening to keep them in the best movie theatres hat with the crown of silver lace. This was bound with a band of silver ribbon and as this ribbon reached the edge of the brim it became a fringe of black threads which fell like a veil over the face. This effect was accomplished by pulling out the silver woof threads of the fabric, leaving the black silk threads of the warp. A shiny "patent leather" finish is being extensively used as a trimming on evening hats where it acts as an effective back ground for ostrich or vulture plumes of brilliant tints.

Paris-The iron hand in the velvet glove is often mentioned but velvet gloves seldom have been seen since the Now, however, a glove which at least she were turned loose in the same play has a velvet cuff has been placed before the public. This new adaptation combines French glace kid or kid suede with velvet or moire silk in the gauntlet type. The body of the glove is of leather while the cuff is of the silk or velvet of a contrasting shade and in many models. These cuffs are elaborately embroidered. The cuff may be worn turned back or over the coal

> New York-Considerable difficulty exists nowadays in looking over the winter coats in determining whether they are cloth coats trimmed with fur or fur coats trimmed with cloth. For many of the cloth coats have whole portions made entirely of fur and nearly all of them are heavily trimmed with cuffs, collars, borders and pockets carrying wide bands of oppossum, beaver, squirrel, seal, wolf, Persian lamb or kolinsky. On some models the sleeves are entirely of fur. On others the skirt portions of the coat are made of fur while the bodice is of cloth and this system is reversed to give a fur body portion above a cloth skirt. Bolivia, Normandy, Panvelaine, and Gerona are among the cloth weaves employed.

Series of Lectures On Drama and Poetry Promised by U. of O.

Maurice Browne and Ellen Van Volkenburg, artists of international prominence and leaders of the Little theatre movement in America, have been secured by public speaking department of the University of Oregon, of which Mrs. Helen Miller Senn is the head, to give a series of lectures on drama and poetry and to conduct special limited classes for dramatic rehearsal at the Portland hotel from November 14 to 32 nclusive. Browne and Miss Van Volken burg produced and directed the official company of actors at the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco.

Lectures will be offered both aftermoon and evening and each lecture is complete. As there are certain groups of lectures, however, which are closely these groups and the purchase of tickets is recommended by the university. The lectures are widely varied and of a ested in contemporary drama and its production, and modern poetry. Interspersed with the lectures, which will be of a conversational type, will be readings from modern plays and poems.

The course being of an entirely educational character, will be offered at nominal prices, the university desiring only to cover the cost of the course. To promote this project and future ones of a similar character, the 200 members of the public speaking classes have or ganized the University of Oregon Ex pression club with the following officers: President, H.
