Washington, Nov. 1.-America going a to set an example, both in words and deeds, to guide other great powers assembling here November 12 for a discussion of reduced armaments.

In the first place the government will set forth frankly what the United States is willing to do with the cooperation of England and other leading powers. In England and other leading powers. In the second place the administration will hold up action on paval appropriations in congress until the arms conference ascertains what it can accomplish toward the end sought.

Different interesting factors enter into America's desire to produce an acceptable plan. Not the least of these is the fact that in times past England.

is the fact that in times past England has responded to suggestions for reduced armament by saying, "Fine—but show us what you wou'd suggest."

PREPARED TO SHOW American negotiators will be prepared o "show" England and the others by the time the conference gets under way what this government does suggest.
They will then be in a position to say:
"Here it is. Now what are you going to do about it?"
But perhaps the most compelling force behind the administration's desire to get the movement for reduced armaments actually under way is public opinion. which is increasingly earnest throughout the world that the conference accom-plish results.

And American public opinion, reflected as it is in congress, demands a program of limited armaments that will be defi-nite. The attitude of congress has plainly revealed itself already as this toward the coming conference: "If you don't accomplish results, we of the 1925 exposition already has become a serious problem to many proponents of the enterprise, according to Ira F. Powers, chairman of the campaign committee in charge of the special election on the city charter amendment. A delegation of volunteer workers from Rose City Park-who called on Powers today stated that the question of the probable distribution of surplus funds from the fair was causing no end of aggitation in that section of the city.

The profits of the exposition will be split three ways in equitable proportions, according to Powers, three parts going to the state, two parts to the city and one to the subscribers toward the $1,000,000 Portland fund for financing Canyon Road: Auto

Briefs Ordered in Injunction Suit on U. S. Reserve Bank

at noon today to make any decision the action which the Brookings State bank has brought against the Federal Reserve bank. The state bank is seeking an injunction against the reserve bank to prevent it from cashing checks drawn on it without payment of the exchange rate. The court took the 'case under advisement and ordered the attorneys to have their briefs filed within a week. Judge Wolverton said his decision on the injunction request would be important, as it would practically decide another suit which is pending between the two banks. T. T. Bennett, attorney for the state bank, urgently requested the court to issue a preliminary injunction. He contended that the present policy of the reserve bank to notify other banks of the state that the State Bank of Brookings refuses to exchange checks at par could do the Brookings bank irreparable
