There is a disposition on the part of some storage egg holders to create artificial strength in the price here, dispite the fact that total holdings overywhere in the country show a very liberal gain over this same period a year ago. There is much difference in the quality of storage goods, and therefore for that reason much difference in the price asked and available for such offering.

That some of the storage stock is so good that it is being sold as fresh goods is indicated by the sales of much greater supplies of freshegus than are actually being received.

Then again reports indicate that some of the beautiful area taking coulted and reserved.

buyers are taking pullets and peewees and by mixing them and selling as pullets, creating greater profits for themselves.

No great an increase has been made by the Pacific Poultry Producers that the Idaho section, recently taken into the fold, is now starting

MARKET-

By Hyman H. Cohen Portland consumers appear to forget that this city today is one of the leading coffee roasting centers in the country and that Portland roasted coffee is today successfully competing with the best

Portland is now receiving its green coffee direct from the plantations of Central and South America and this means not only a saving in freight charge, but the local roasting allows the public to secure the stock while its strength is retained.

Coffee prices here today are fully down to the so-called normal, this being one of the few commodities that did not show war-time advances of huge Winter spinach is now in excellent condition with sales as low as two pounds for 15c.

Dates direct from Arabia are now being offered in the retail shops much ahead of the normal schedule because of the fact that Portland is bringing such stock by its own steamship lines. Consumers are advised that Eastern eranberries are no better than local stock, if as good, therefore they should not pay the extra price demanded because of the huge freight rates across the continent.

signment and this has entirely filled up the home trade.

Despite the fact that Takima growers are freely offering their potatoes both f. o. b. and on a consignment basis, local growers continue to refuse to do business except at prices that been named here. No bids at all were been named here. No bids at all were made for hard winter, northern spring or red Walla.

Perhaps one of the factors at this time is that only a small per cent of the local late crop has as yet been dug, a condition that may mean ruin to those who are delaying operations. Everyone appears to be awaiting a frost before digging.

Tests made in several sections show that the Oregon grop will this season show one of its original total cutout. It Oregon grop will this season show one of its greatest, if not its greatest, total output. It has not been definitely ascertained that the has not been definitely ascertained that the damage by reason of previous frosts was in point of volume so limited as to be scarcely considered with the total production. Practically all of the damage was confined to so-called midseason planting, while the bulk of the planting was either early or late.

Buyers of this territory are no longer showing any disposition to take hold, indicating that they will allow the growers to have plenty of time to make up their minds to sell.

Coos Cranberries Success Coos Cranberries Success

North Bend, Or., Nov. 3.—The cranberry crop of Coos Bay has turned out a paying proposition. Of the cranberry tracts on North slough, the production has been about 100 to 150 bushels per acre. There are at the present time about 18 acres planted in cranberries in this district. This acreage, with considerable acreage in the southern part of the county, has demonstrated that cranberry raising in Coos county is successful and profitable. There are many acres of land in this county that, when cleared and prepared, would grow good cranberries. The and prepared, would grow good cranberries, acreage is increasing from year to year.
