Madeline Steffen, Reed delegate to the Women's Intercollegiate conference at the University of California, returned Thursday. Miss Steffen was enthusiastic over the conference and claimed that the concrete results of the gathering would well justify the meeting. The following questions were discussed and decisions made: Spoking by women should be dealt with by forming public sentiment against it and by appealing to women from the standpoint of their health. Success in student government depends on cooperation between men and women students and realization of individual responsibility.
