A Romantic Narrative

By W. S. W. AS a man's story, "The Shiek," at the Columbia, is a failure, for the picture lacks the punch enjoyed by the red-blooded. That it is not without appeal, however, is shown by the indignation with which that remark was re-celved by a woman nearby. "That's the trouble with men," she "Things in this world must be made sugar coated the better. We must live more or less in a series of dreams, no matter how far fetched they may be. "Now Rudelph Valentine in his levely, one flowing robes of a shiek is ideal There is a wicked something in his eye that is attractive to the feminine element even if it isn't to mere man. Then, too, the romance of being kidnaped by an Arab chief-well, it is sublime and one could see all the girls edging forward on their seats visualizing themselves in the same circumstances." All of which, being true, undoubt-

The Coat-Frock for the Young Girl May Be Brightened With Embroidery.

For street wear, shopping or business nours, nothing is so wholly satisfying as the trim coat-frock, often opening from top to bottom and embodying some chic detail which endears it to the feminine mind. The serges, broadcloths and twills of winter are especially adapted to this type of frock and may be made much gayer for youth by adding a motif of embroidery worked in multi-colored cheille threads. The attractive surplice losing and new, ecclesiastical sleeves are part of the smart frock illustrated here, which is belted loosely in the favored chemise manner. nteresting features of this week's issue (Copyright, 1921, by The Vogue Co., New York) | NOW PLAYING TONIGHT NOW PLAYING
