

PAROLED YOUTH CLOUTS BOY AND IS BACK IN JAIL

Edward Lisoski, a young man who was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary and paroled after being convicted of manslaughter for the killing of Rachel E. Tupper by his recklessness, was back in his old cell at the county jail this morning.

Lisoski may find his parole revoked and be sent to Salem as a result of his latest scrape. He is charged with assaulting George Austed. On Tuesday, according to Austed, he and another youth were running to a fire. They met Lisoski and two other young men and asked them where the fire was.

"You are the fellow who stole my pigeons," Lisoski is said to have shouted, clouting Austed on the side of the head.

When Lisoski was paroled after his conviction before Circuit Judge Stapleton he was ordered to report regularly to the Rev. Mr. Matuzewski and to attend the minister's church, as well as stay off the streets at night.

JAIL BEND SUSPECT ON OWN REMARK

Bend, Dec. 16.—Remarks let slip by friends of A. J. Weston, convicted of the murder of Robert Krog, sister rancher, and an admission said to have been made by George Stillwell following Weston's trial last year are said to have resulted in Stillwell's arrest in Portland on a second degree murder charge as an alleged accomplice of Weston.

Stillwell's remark is said to have tended to indicate that he was an eye witness to the killing of Krog and took part in the crime, according to W. F. Meyers, special prosecutor in the Weston case. Meyers and Sheriff Roberts left last night for Portland to bring Stillwell here to face the charge.

School Girl Who Stands by Lipstick Receives Proposals

Knobel, Ark., Dec. 16.—(I. N. S.)—Pearl Pugsley, 15-year-old Knobel high school girl who was dismissed from school by the authorities because, they said, she refused to comply with their anti-lipstick order, prohibiting the use of artificial aids to beauty, is being deluged with letters congratulating her on her action in defying the school board and offering everything from positions to marriage.

"I receive scores of letters each day," she said today, "but I would rather go to school. I shall not consider any of the business propositions at present."

Miss Pugsley's application for a writ of mandamus compelling the school authorities to admit her was put over today until the March term of court.

Chief Turns Guns On 'Wobbly' Band

Portland will not be a safe place for I. W. W. to live in if Chief of Police L. V. Jenkins has his present plans carried out. Reports have come to him that the "wobblies" were making a strong bid to have Portland the Northwest headquarters of the organization and it is said that secret meetings already have been held to gain this end. The police department has had plain clothes men attend several of these gatherings and their reports will be made to the chief.

California May Not Join Oregon in Link Of Pacific Highway

While Oregon has practically completed the Pacific highway from Portland to the California line as one of its primary arteries, California has made preliminary arrangements to run its primary road through to Crescent City on the coast and so abandon the improvement of the connection to the main Pacific highway.

This information is contained in a letter submitted to the directors of the Chamber of Commerce by H. J. Ottenheimer, chairman of the outdoor and recreation committee of the organization, in which he outlines the activities of various states to take advantage of the federal aid act for improvement of primary roads.

Ottenheimer said that it was his understanding that when a Pacific highway was proposed by Samuel Hill that California committed itself to construction of that state's share. He further recommends that Oregon fall in line with the activities of Idaho and Wyoming, which are seeking a Northwest connection with the Pacific highway either near Granger, Wyo., or Salt Lake City. The report will be acted upon at the next meeting of the board of directors.

Oregon Delegation Asked to Work for Coos Bay Project

Pushing of action to obtain inclusion of Coos Bay development of the project to the rivers and harbors bill has been requested of the Oregon delegation by the Chamber of Commerce following a meeting of officials of the organization with a delegation from Marshfield Thursday afternoon. Attention of the local organization was called to the fact that Coos Bay has been shoved into the background for the past 20 years and that the revised project had been approved by the district engineer and endorsed by the chief of engineers during a recent visit. The Marshfield delegation was composed of John C. Kendall, A. K. Peck, Charles Hall and C. W. Parker.
