Indications are that there will not be great increase in the acreage of cane and strawberries in Eastern Multnomah county for 1922. Prices for the 1921 crop were good, but prospects for 1922 are not definite. Many growers will confine their attention to improving the yield they have in bearing. Several large loganberry and raspberry plots will come into heavy bearing the coming summer, among them being 20 acres of loganberries on the Lafollette place. Strawberry plots are rotated about every four years, and several large new plots planted last year will be in full bearing this year. The Japanese tenant farmers expect to keep up their strawperry fields, but do not seem to be pre paring for new ones.
