

SCULPTURING OF LATE DOSCH WILL BE ON EXHIBITION

Memorial Exhibit of the Work of Portland Artist, Now Dead, Opens Monday in Museum.

A memorial exhibition of the work of Roswell Holt Dosch, son of Col. and Mrs. Henry E. Dosch, whose death occurred in Portland during the war, is to be opened at the Portland Art Museum Monday, to continue until February 1. The opening of the exhibition by chance falls upon the 33rd birthday anniversary of the young sculptor, who was a pupil of Rodin and Bourdelle, and who had been detailed as personal adjutant for service with the training camp at Reed College.

The exhibition includes the last work of the sculptor, "The New Earth," in bronze, the figure showing a supreme type of young manhood, his strong arms having just broken the shackles of bondage. A head of F. X. Matthieu in bronze and a seated figure of Mrs. Abigail Sweet Dunaway, a friend and counsellor of the artist, are also among the notable pieces in the group. A grotesque head decoration for a fountain which was to have ornamented the architecture of the building at the University of Oregon is one of the striking figures in the exhibition. There are also numerous paintings in oil, for Roswell Dosch was a painter as well as a sculptor, and a pianist.

Roswell Dosch showed his artistic talent early in life when he had finished his tutoring in Portland and went to the Sorbonne in Paris, where he studied with Rodin and Bourdelle, who later chose him from a class of 150 students to be one of four private pupils.

On the suggestion of Rodin, Roswell Dosch went to Rome for painting. On his return to Oregon he was offered a position at the University of Oregon, where he established the department of modeling and free-hand drawing.

ANOTHER YOUNG LIFE IS TRIBUTE TO WAR

Lieutenant Fred H. Crane

Lieutenant Fred H. Crane Jr., who died Sunday afternoon, December 25, in Portland, was well known in Eastern Multnomah county, where he had resided all his life with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Crane Sr., on the Sandy road near Rockwood. He was a member of Rockwood Grange, of which his father is master, and was beloved by all. He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Margaret Eshantia, whom he married upon his return from the World war; a daughter; his brother, George Crane; his parents and an aged grandmother. He went to France with the Oregon forces and was made first lieutenant in the machine gun company of the 162d infantry (known as the Third Oregon).

In this service he aided in training many machine gun officers and men, and while drilling his company was injured in the spine by stepping into a shell hole and falling on a machine gun. This injury did not at first develop malignantly, and only after returning home and entering civil life did he begin to suffer severely. Efforts to save him at the United States government hospitals in Oregon and Washington were unavailing.

Funeral services were held Wednesday at the old homestead, after which the flag-draped casket was carried to the Catholic church on the Powell Valley road, accompanied by old schoolmates, comrades in arms and officers acting as honorary pallbearers. Final services were held at Mount Scott cemetery, where military honors were paid to him.

Oregon Agricultural Glee Club Concert Is Well Received

Concert of the Oregon Agricultural glee club at the Auditorium Saturday night, under the auspices of the Ellettsville Lyceum bureau, was well received by the many friends of the Corvallis singers. The glee club responded with many extra numbers, in addition to the numerous selections given as a part of the regular program. Solos were furnished by Stewart, Kirkham, Dentler and Begg. With played several violin selections, and piano solos were furnished by De Macedo, Wells and Hamblin. College songs formed a large part of the program. A negro spiritual, sung by the club, was a strong feature.

WORK ON CHURCH HALTED BY COURT

Alameda Residents Get Order Restraining Congregationalists From Building.

In compliance with the temporary restraining order issued Friday by Presiding Circuit Judge Tucker, no further work was performed Saturday on the new Alameda Congregational church, located in the triangular block at East Thirty-first, Mason street and Regents Drive.

The Rev. Robert Allingham, pastor, said nothing is to be done but wait until the court decides finally.

About 75 residents of Alameda engaged counsel and petitioned the court for the injunction, contending that Alameda is a restricted district, for residences only.

The preacher contends that no building restrictions cover the triangular block, stating that he investigated the matter before purchasing.

The complaining residents have paid $10 each toward a fund, to have the building restriction interpreted. If they win the church project will be abandoned.

Allingham came to Portland about five months ago upon instructions from the National Congregational Home Missionary society, and was authorized to expend $10,000 in a community church. Out of the sum must come his salary, in addition to the price of the lot and building.

Before Allingham came, two lots were purchased at East Thirtieth and Mason streets, on which another church project was started. After the concrete walls were in, the neighbors objected, so the project was abandoned, and the preacher searched the neighborhood to find property not covered by restrictions.

Rev. Ralph C. McAfee, executive secretary of the Portland Council of Churches, Saturday declared it wrong for real estate companies or anyone else to place restrictions which hamper the work of the church. As there is no church within 25 blocks of this corner, McAfee said the community needs such an institution.

LEGION URGED TO SECURE DATA FOR LAND SETTLEMENT

Many Tracts Are Already Listed, but Work of Selection Is to Be Pushed More Rapidly.

All American Legion posts in the state have been urged to appoint committees for the purpose of securing available land in the various districts for soldier settlement, according to Robert O. Case, secretary of the state land committee of the American Legion.

Many tracts have already been listed, but it is the intention of the land committee to secure enough land by the time the bonus money is actually ready to be distributed to take care of all ex-soldiers who actually desire to purchase a farm.

Under the plan proposed the owner of the land gives clear title to the ex-soldier to permit him to secure the loan from the state. Part of the loan is paid directly to the former owner of the land, and the balance due the owner is secured by a second mortgage. This second mortgage is to be paid off under the same terms provided for repayment of the loan—25 years at 4 per cent, plus a 3 per cent annual payment.

The Squaw Creek irrigation district in Central Oregon was the first tract to be secured under these terms. Several thousand acres in the Ochoco project have been secured under option for soldier settlement. In addition, a large number of individual tracts in Western Oregon have been secured.

All interests in Crook county were combined in the work of securing options on land in the Ochoco. Representatives of the American Legion, the Crook County Chamber of Commerce and the landowners cooperated in the movement to secure settlers. It is reported that a member of the Legion, operating as a scout throughout the whole district, has secured approximately 60 per cent of the Ochoco project for soldier settlement.

Thomas A. Sweeney, chairman of the state land committee, announced yesterday that all communications in regard to settling these tracts, or concerning tracts offered for settlement by ex-soldiers, should be addressed to the secretary of the state land committee, American Legion, Portland.

Colliers Tells of Seaside Ad Getting

The method by which The Journal obtained an advertisement from the city of Seaside, after the Breakwater club, local publicity organization of that community, failed to provide funds for an advertising campaign, is told in Collier's of January 14 under a series of articles captioned "Selling Will Sell." The article calls attention to the issue of The Journal for Sunday, July 8, in which appeared an advertisement of the city of Seaside, which was signed by 21 Seaside firms. The story places Fred Lockley in the role of advertising salesman and his efforts which obtained a large display advertisement and resultant business for the community are commended upon.
