

POSTERS TO SHOW PUPILS DANGER OF FIRE; SAFEGUARDS

Exhibits Will Be Placed in Schools
Under Direction of City Fire
Marshal Edward Grenfell.

Posters and exhibits depicting the cause of fire and damage resulting from it will be placed in each of the schools of the city, Fire Marshal Edward Grenfell announced Saturday afternoon.

The various exhibits will be used as object lessons for the pupils and will be a part of the educational program carried on each year by the fire marshal's office. Grenfell explained that it was the custom to send speakers from the fire department to give talks at the schools and tell of the many ways fire can be prevented by the exercise of proper caution and common sense.

"We find that by impressing the necessity of fire prevention on the minds of the children more homes, the origin of most of the fires, can be reached than in any other way," he said.

Through the courtesy of the school board assemblies are called when the fire prevention speaker arrives and the talk is delivered to all the pupils. These children, on arriving home at the end of the day, tell the parents what they have learned. The amount of missionary work that is accomplished is amazing.

EXHIBITS PLANNED

What the fire marshal proposes to do is to have placards painted that will attract the attention of the children and on the placards some exhibit that will tell its own story. For instance, one of the placards will bear a paper lamp shade that has been charred by being used with an electric globe; another will be the blackened remains of a wooden barrel in which hot ashes were placed.

Each exhibit bears a legend which in simple terms tells the story so as to be understood by the pupils. The placards attached to the fire marshal's office have been collecting such relics for some time and a collection is now ready that covers practically all of the common causes of fires.

In addition to the exhibits several reels of motion pictures, donated by the National Board of Underwriters, will be shown at the schools. The pictures show the cause of fires and traces them through until it has grown into a general conflagration. As the marshal pointed out, the films are intensely interesting and can do much to impress the children and teach the danger of small fires developing into a thing causing great destruction.

FIRE DRILLS HELPFUL

Through the efforts of the marshal's office fire drills have been instituted in all the schools. The pupils are taught the need of calm and quick action when the alarm bell is sounded. It is due to this, he said, that Portland has had no serious loss of life from school fires.

"There is an average of eight fires in schools of this city each year," he went on to say. "So efficient have the drills become that in each case the pupils have marched from the building in an orderly fashion and been unaware of the existence of a real fire until they are safely outside."

The most common cause of school fires as explained by the chief is that janitors are prone to force the furnaces on cold days with the result that a roof fire is started from drying sparks. This, he said, could be easily prevented by proper instruction of the janitors.

TALKS ARE FEATURED

During the winter months a member of the fire marshal's office is detailed to appear before the various clubs and fraternal clubs and give talks on fire prevention. Ignorance, the marshal states, is the greatest cause of fires and the talks given show many of the ways that are ordinarily considered "safe."

Some of the points brought out in the talks are the necessity of keeping basements cleared of rubbish, especially around the base of stoves; the danger in using kerosene to start fires; fire caused by hanging clothes over a stove to dry and the proximity of lace curtains to an open flame.

To the school children instructions in sounding in fire alarms from homes are given with particular emphasis laid on the result of turning in false alarms
