

PONTIFF IS KEPT ALIVE BY USE OF ARTIFICIAL MEANS

quested that the final sacrament be administered in the presence of the entire papal family and court.

According to vaticanal ceremonial, the sacrament is to be administered only when the supreme pontiff is on the verge of losing consciousness, but in practice this rule has often been changed, as nearly every pope has expressed the wish to receive the holy viaticum when fully conscious of the solemnity and sanctity of the act. Pope Benedict, especially, has often told his relatives and private chaplains that he preferred to receive the last communion while still strong enough consciously to do honor to the Almighty.

THOUSANDS PRAY

As soon as the decision had been reached to administer the last sacrament an order was issued to all of the 400 churches of Rome. Almost simultaneously the bells of the various churches began tolling to summon the people for the purpose of offering up prayers for the pope.

At the same moment when the final sacraments were administered, thousands of people were on their knees, either in one of the churches or in private chapels.

The ceremony itself was simple and affecting. As soon as the pope's private confessor had finished confessing him, the doors of the sick room were thrown open and the prelates and relatives assembled in the antechamber entered. At the same time word was sent to St. Peter's, where all of the cardinals and prelates strong enough to sustain the ordeal had in the meanwhile assembled.

GATHER NEAR BEDSIDE

From St. Peter's sacristy where it had been organized, the procession slowly wound its way up through the Sistine chapel chanting all the way prescribed prayers and psalms. From the court where the procession paused for a moment to allow the more aged priests to catch up with the head of the column, the procession resumed its march up to the papal apartments.

On the threshold of the latter it was met by the prefect of ceremonies together with the assistant masters of ceremonies. Only a few cardinals entered the sick room. The remainder of the procession continued to the corridor repeating and chanting the prayers of the dying.

Owing to the weakened condition of the pope, only a small particle of the holy wafer was placed on his tongue.

ENTER SICK ROOM

The administration of the wafer over the grand penitentiary of the sacred college approached the bed surrounded by his assistants and read to the pontiff the profession of faith prescribed as formulated by the Vatican and the Trent councils.

After reading the profession of faith, Cardinal Giorgi gave to the pontiff the absolution in articulo mortis. The words of the formula were pronounced slowly as though to impress on every one within hearing the solemnity of the occasion.

Then all of the heads of the various religious orders stationed at Rome entered the sick chamber. One by one they bestowed on the pope the various indulgences which each order has the special privilege to confer.

After the ceremony the procession slowly returned to St. Peter's. Around the bed of the pontiff there remained only the domestic prelates, whose duty it is to assist the pope until the end comes, and the cabulars of personal valets.

While the ceremony was going on in the papal apartments, groups of nuns and monks belonging to nearly all of the religious orders having convents and monasteries at Rome prayed.
