Chinquapin Tree Is Greek to Head of Park Department

Do you know what a chinquapin is? Neither did C. P. Keyser, superintendent of parks, until R. L. Chenault, noted surseryman of Orleans, France, told him and also informed him they grew in Portland. A search for the gadget was started and it was found to be a native cousin of the chestnut. A tree was found on Main street near King street. Chenault obtained several seeds and intends to propagate them in his nurser;

Chenault, who is one of the leading rose experts of Europe, made a special trip to Portland to visit rose test gardens of the park bureau. He arrived in the city Wednesday but did not come to the park bureau until Friday morning. Alone he had visited the various city parks. He left for Seattle Friday night.

Charles K. Edmunds, president of Canton Christian college, one of the greatest educational institutions in China, will give a free illustrated lecture on the subject. "Thirty Thousand Miles Through China," in Reed college chapel at 8 p. m., Friday, January 27, to which the public is invited. Dr. Edward O. Si son, chairman of the department of International Good Will of the Churches, in extending the invitation to the public to hear this illustrated lecture says: "Any wise effort toward world fellowship must be based upon a knowledge of facts. This is an opportunity to get first hand facts in graphic form about one of the two greatest world problems."

The picturesquely bouffant fashions of ancient Spanish modes find almost universal favor with the woman of today, particularly for evening gowns and often for afternoon frocks. This gown, with its characteristic, low, pointed bodice, Eugenie shoulder-line, and pronouncedly full skirt, might have gowned a Velasquez beauty, so typical is it of the feminine costume of the land of the toreador. Satin crepe and metal lace are two of the mediums in which this dress may be developed, and they are also the only materials needed, for they form so rich a combination that no ornamentation is required. The butterfly bow, which ties in the back, is cut in one piece with the pointed front panel of the bodice. Spain Inspires the New Evening Gowns
