Another Step Forward

A S we progress from year to year, and period to period in this resume of eyents in the history of Ladd & Tilton Bank as it developed with Portland and the Pacific Northwest, we are impressed by the steady, unpausing nature of that development.

Anticipating, with characteristic foresight, the era of great sectional prosperity which was predestined to follow on the heels of the Civil War, Ladd & Tilton, in the fall of 1864, moved the scene of their operations to more commodious quarters at the corner of Front and Stark Streets, in the building pictured above.

In a Portland newspaper of that day, we read:

"Moving Into New Quarters-Messrs. Ladd & Tilton have fitted up a new Banking Office in the building corner of Stark and Front streets, and commenced moving yesterday. The new quarters will be decidedly more convenient than their former location, dispensing with the ascent of a flight of stairs in the transaction of business. . . .

Thus did Ladd & Tilton, Bankers, demonstrate their faith in Portland's future;-faith which the passing years have not only served to justify but to strengthen, for today Ladd & Tilton is Portland's leading bank as it was Portland's first bank; ever progressive, always demonstrating its faith in the city and community,-willing and anxious to serve.
