

BRACED SPANDREL ARCH FEATURE IN REINFORCED SPAN

Design of Proposed $25,000 Gulch Structure Said to Be Unique; Length to Be 290 Feet

Use of the braced spandrel arch in reinforced concrete will be one of the features of the proposed bridge on Alexander street, across Blythewood gulch, in the Kings Heights section. Plans for the bridge, which will cost $25,000, were designed by F. T. Fowler, city bridge engineer, and will be filed this week.

This type of construction is an innovation in concrete work. The braced spandrel arch is usually of structural steel, and, according to A. G. Johnson, assistant commissioner of public works, this is the first bridge of the type to be built of concrete.

The bridge, including the approaches, will be 290 feet long and will have a 150-foot center arch. The deck of the bridge will provide for a 16-foot roadway, with a 4-foot sidewalk.

Crossing the gulch the new structure will take the place of the present wooden one, which has been declared unsafe for traffic for two years. The new bridge will afford an avenue for vehicular traffic to the Salvation Army Rescue home and to the district lying west of Gordon street.

The cost of the bridge will be met by assessments against the property owners of that district, most of whom have already signed approval of the project. The assessment against the property of the Salvation Army will be approximately one third of the total cost, Johnson said.

When the preliminary plans are filed, the project will be discussed by the city council. Hearings will be held for the property owners to make remonstrances before authority is granted to advertise for contracts to build the bridge.

ORDINANCE AIMS TO REGULATE HOUSE-MOVERS

Regulation of professional house-movers is the aim of the ordinance now being drafted by O. Laurgaard, city engineer, which if passed will require posting a certified check to cover damage that might be done to streets by the moving. Laurgaard said that while house-movers are required to post bond, trouble is occasioned by the city in collecting for damages. He also said that by means of the certified check the firm moving but one house would not be required to put up the bond in addition to the check.
