

MINE OWNERS WILL ACCEPT HARDING CONFERENCE CALL

By David Lawrence
(Copyright, 1922, by The Journal)
Washington, June 29.—Mine owners have signified their intention of attending President Harding's conference here Saturday in which the government will use its good offices to persuade operators and miners to settle the coal strike.

John L. Lewis, head of the miners' union, had already accepted the invitation, so that the willingness of the operators to come too, ends all maneuvering on that point. In past years acceptance of an invitation to a conference usually was preceded by the laying down of conditions for the conference, but in this case the call was issued by the president of the United States and neither side could afford to defy public opinion by ignoring such a summons.

FEELING OPTIMISTIC

The greatest confidence prevails that the coal strike will be settled and that a precedent will be established which will go a long way towards preventing future coal strikes. The intervention of the chief executive incidentally is not merely as a presiding officer or as a mediator, but as a representative of the public interest. The government has hesitated to use a club or to indicate the source of its legal power in eventually taking a hand if emergency arose, but it is now clear—and both sides understand it when they get in conference—that the supplying of the nation with fuel is considered a public interest of paramount importance—in fact, so important that the broad constitutional powers of national safety would be invoked by the executive if the American people really began to suffer. Talk of government seizure of the mines is but a symptom of the gradually developing feeling that a recurrence of strikes mean suffering to the employees, a readjustment of finances on the part of operators, a depletion of coal reserves and a gouging of the public as prices to the consumer are inevitably raised.

IMMUNITY CERTAIN

President Harding has another reason for presiding at the coal conference. The mine operators, many of whom are under indictment for making wage agreements with mine unions in the past, have insisted that the federal courts might charge them with contempt if they entered into any agreement while the courts were trying cases growing out of previous agreements. Assurances from the attorney general that prosecution would not follow have not been deemed sufficient. The president himself is calling the conference, so no federal judge is likely to interfere. In fact, there is every reason to believe the courts would not have intervened even if Mr. Harding had not called the conference.

Yet the action of the president serves the double purpose of guaranteeing immunity from prosecution for agreements made in the conference beginning here Saturday and bringing into play the government chief as a mediator and as a representative of the people who must be protected against the effects of a diminished coal supply.

TO REPRESENT HARDING

Undoubtedly Secretary Davis and Secretary Hoover will be asked by the president to act in his behalf after the opening meeting, but the presidential authority will be present just the same.

As for the crisis in the railroad situation, the government here is not as hopeful of results as in the coal dispute. There is no tribunal to which the controversy could have been brought. The railroad disputants have the labor board. The decision has been rendered by that board and the question is now whether the railway shopmen will respect the decision or strike in the face of it. If they strike they may focus attention anew on the fact that the railway labor board under the present transportation act has no power to enforce its decision except the moral power of public opinion and congress may be persuaded to put "teeth" in the transportation act.

Mr. Harding, while a member of the United States senate, voted for an anti-strike provision to be inserted in the transportation act now on the statute books, but the provision was eliminated before the bill was adopted.

PRESIDENT MAY ACT

It would require little impetus from an acute railroad situation to cause Mr. Harding to appeal for such a provision again though the effect on labor as a whole at a moment when members of congress are up for reelection might prevent action at this time.

It is not expected here that a general walkout will develop on the railroads and that those shop craft unions which do strike will not seriously disturb transportation in this country. The question of whether the railway employees will openly defy the decision of the railroad labor board by a strike is really doubted here, for drastic action of some kind would be inevitable from government sources. The opinion still prevails that an eleventh hour postponement or truce will be effected.
