Every boy and girl will be presented with a free warm spot next to Cordray's heart and the present offer should attract the younger generation. BURGESS'S BEDTIME STORIES

A Wonderful Double Surprise By Thornton W. Burgess Surprises may be dreadful. Again they may be sad. The only kind at all worth while are those that make you glad. —Whitefoot the Wood Mouse.

BACK in the home, which the runaway little Mouse had left, were scrow and worry. Mrs. Whitefoot would not leave the three other little mice for fear that one of these might wander off and become lost. So Whitefoot went along hunting for his lost little son. He hunted everywhere he could think of, but not a trace of him did he find.

Now, of course, Whitefoot knew all the dangers of the Great World, and he knew that there was very little chance that a little Mouse who knew nothing about these dangers and how to meet them would live long. He kept hunting and hunting, but from the first he had very little hope, and his heart was filled with sadness. He found the tracks of Buster Bear. He found where Buster had pulled a stump to pieces, and where he had pulled over an old log. He smelled the scent Reddy Fox had left. In his own mind he was sure that either Buster or Reddy had caught the little runaway.

Having looked everywhere he could think of, Whitefoot at last gave up the hunt. "It is of no use to hunt longer," said Whitefoot to himself. "That poor little fellow didn't know of a single hiding place. He didn't even know when to sit still and when to run. There isn't a chance in the world that he could have escaped. Why couldn't he have waited until I could have taught him the ways of the Great World?"

Now it happened that when at last Whitefoot stopped hunting for the lost little Mouse he was not far from his old home in a tall, dead stub. He was tired and so decided to run over to that old home and rest awhile in the fine soft bed he had there before going back to tell little Reddy that he hadn't found their lost little son. So he ran over to the tall, dead stub and up it he went. He had a hollow which had been his home. Whitefoot paused an instant he popped inside. You see he was sure there was no one else there.

If ever there was a surprised Wood Mouse that one was Whitefoot. He discovered that there was some one in his bed. His nose told him in a minute that it was another Wood Mouse, and he was all prepared to be very angry and to drive that other Wood Mouse out. But if he was surprised to find another Wood Mouse in there, just try to imagine how much

Columbia Beach Is Getting Ready for Big Opening Day

Columbia Beach, the seashore-like amusement resort on the Columbia, will be opened next Saturday afternoon following a complete renovation of the buildings and the grounds. Crews of men have been busy for several weeks getting the park in shape for the big opening program. Buildings have been repainted and sties have been placed about the grounds, dispelling completely the dusty tan of winter. Tables again will be available for picnic parties and the gas kitchen stoves have been put in order for the big throngs that annually visit the sandy shored playground.

Many new amusement features have been added to the long board walk this year and all of the old shows are busy putting on the finishing touches to their attractions. Joseph M. Rieg, the manager of the park, has declared that he will spare no expense this year in presenting to patrons of the beach one of the best entertainment seasons on record. Rieg is considering several big features, but declares that the only point in doubt is the feasibility of producing them.

The menagerie has been moved from its winter quarters and now is housed in the cages that face on the attractive little duck pond. In fact, everything is almost in readiness for the opening.

Complimenting her brother, William H. Kendall, who is on furlough from West Point, Miss Adeline Kendall will be hostess at an informal dance Friday evening. The heights of success are often climbed by the fellows who are always on the level.—Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

DRESS

Separate Coats Are Worn Over Frocks of Different Material One of the strongest fashion notes of the season are the little separate coats in silk, matelasse, which are worn over frocks of different material. The model sketched, from Douillet, is in cafe au lait colored matelasse and crepe de chine. The coat has a turnover collar and is belted, with an ingenious arrangement of corded straps, made of the material placed over the hips to hold the fullness in place. It is fastened with a buckle made of two crystal ornaments, which change in color from rose to cream. The frock is of matching crepe de chine, entirely pleated except for plain elbow sleeves.

Women Put Auto Thieves to Flight

Aberdeen, Wash., July 4.—Automobile thieves who attempted to rob the Smith garage at Mebourne, ten miles from here, were put to flight by Mrs. Smith and several women neighbors who fired a fusillade of shots at them.

FASHIONS REALM

Paris, July 5.—The Parisienne was not content until she cut the sleeves out of her frock and left the arm entirely bare. Now she complains because of the bareness and has added the quaintest of bracelets to replace the sleeves. It is a wide armband of velvet or of satin ribbon, sewn to an elastic band which holds the ribbon in place. Sometimes this is merely a plain bit of black, making a nondescript arm look white and a white arm dazzling. Sometimes it is a colored ribbon, topped by two or three satin rosettes and decorated with long ribbon streamers.

London, July 5.—The novelties are brightening the pastel tinted gown which so many women effect for evening wear in the country. One idea is a hip girde of beads and the other is an extraordinary light wrap. The hip girde is usually only composed of some such colors as turquoise and black or sealing wax and silver. It is black or sealing wax and silver. It is very wide, almost in the proportions of a narrow girde corset. The little wrap is slightly useful and highly ornamental. Of brilliant chiffon or georgette, it is nothing more than a wide scarf with armholes.

Paris, July 5.—Along the Riviera, as well as in Paris itself, white and smoke gray are favorite colors. White particularly is enjoying a tremendous vogue this season and is worn becomingly by women of all ages. Gray is not so universally becoming, but there are lovely new shades of it for those whom it suits. The other popular colors at the moment seem to be a pale yellow, rather light and bright blue, shades of rose—especially the deeper shades—and flames.

Paris, July 5.—Little ribbon fans are being used as trimming for both hats and gowns, each showing three or four colors. Old-fashioned buckles and buttons are being limited in ribbon trimmings. Straight from the shoes of the 18th century dandies come the ribbon rosettes with which modern shoes are brightened. Streamers of ribbon are attached at various points to summer coats, which often have collar and cuff of ribbon flowers. Silk braid in loops are often used to cover whole skirts. Fur as a dress decoration is more popular than ever.

KATHERINE MacDONALD, as she appears on the screen at the Rivoli theatre this week in a highly interesting motion picture drama, "The Infidel." The film is a stirring melodramatic romance of the South Seas.

Japan Postpones Ratifying Pacts To End of Month

Tokio, July 5.—(I. N. S.)—The most important expected feature of July in Japan failed to materialize. It had been expected that the regent, Prince Hirohito, as a courtesy to Secretary of the Navy Denby and other visiting naval notables from the United States, would ratify the several treaties entered into at the Washington conference. For some unknown reason the ratification did not come and, it was learned today, had been postponed until the return of the regent from Hokkaido the last of the month.

The regent received the Annapolis class at 10 o'clock this morning, chatting with Secretary Denby and thanking the party for coming to Japan. The ladies of the party were presented to the empress. Mayor Goto entertained at a brilliant luncheon today, attended by Premier Kato. The imperial princess and princesses were official hosts at a tea at the Akasaka palace this afternoon and tonight Baron Uchida will give a dinner.

The area devoted to cotton cultivation in Paraguay has doubled in three years.
