

HARDING WOULD ENLARGE POWERS OF TARIFF BODY

By David Lawrence

Washington, July 7.—President Harding wants the powers of the tariff commission enlarged and he will insist upon a provision to that effect in the pending tariff bill.

Senator McCumber, chairman of the finance committee of the senate, has just announced on the floor of the senate that many of the changes in the bill since its introduction have been occasioned by changing conditions from day to day.

Mr. Harding is among those who believe that if conditions change while the bill is under consideration they will change when it is law and some permanent machinery for alteration must be provided because the senate finance committee cannot stay in continuous session to do the job when once the measure is law.

HAS OPPORTUNITY

The president is prepared to make an earnest appeal for the transfer of this problem to the hands of the tariff commission. This body at present has only powers of inquiry and study. For generations it has been argued that the tariff must be taken out of politics if the subject can be handled by a tariff commission.

The president has the greatest opportunity an American president has ever had to overcome the traditional objections in congress to the giving up by congress of the task of making tariff bills. Heretofore the power has been jealously guarded because of a fear that the protectionist or tariff for revenue principles would be abandoned according as the tariff commission was composed of those who leaned toward the Democratic or Republican view of tariff making.

TAKES FLING AT MOVE

Within the last few days the Republican national committee has taken a fling at the movement for a "non-partisan tariff commission," by insisting that there could be no such thing as one or the other of the two principles must prevail.

Mr. Harding is a protectionist. He quiets the fears of those who would hesitate to give the full power to a tariff commission by urging that the commission should merely recommend and that the chief executive should have the full power to proclaim the tariff duties as conditions change. This correspondent has been assured that Mr. Harding stands today on the recommendations he made in his address to congress in which he said:

SEEKS WAY

"I hope a way will be found to make for flexibility and elasticity so that rates may be adjusted to meet unusual and changing conditions which cannot be accurately anticipated. These are problems incident to unfair practices and to exchanges which madness in money have made almost unsolvable. I know of no manner in which to effect this flexibility other than the extension of the powers of the tariff commission so that it can adapt itself to a scientific and wholly just administration of the law."

BIG QUESTION INVOLVED

"But the plan is feasible and the proper functioning of the board would give us a better administration of a defined policy than ever can be made possible by tariff duties prescribed without flexibility."

By the phrase "administration of a defined policy" the president means in his own case a protectionist policy. The evils of a tariff law are not usually one of principle, but the application of a principle. It is more often a question of whether the protection is for the manufacturer or the consumer and whether the protection, if it is for the manufacturer, is sufficient to keep out foreign competition without raising the price too high for the American consumer. As costs of production and labor conditions fluctuate its duties also change. Mr. Harding wants the protectionist policy applied honestly.

WOULD SAVE TIME

He believes a tariff commission could constantly furnish the data and the chief executive could thus change the duties from time to time to conform to the fluctuation in economic conditions throughout the country. Many of the Republicans who are to vote for the pending tariff bill will do so with a lukewarm feeling. They know the bill will cause dissatisfaction later on. They would welcome, therefore, some corrective machinery which would, in itself, constitute an assurance against the bad working of the pending measure.

Congress would always be able to revoke the power given the executive if it were abused. The saving of time and trouble for members of congress, it is realized, would be a big advantage.

Aside from that, however, the president is confident it will be better for the country—both for the manufacturers and consumers—if they could be sure of a square deal at all times by a body of experts responsible to the executive alone and not particular constituencies with naturally biased viewpoints.

Secretary Denby Hailed as True Friend by Japan

Tokio, July 7.—(I. N. S.)—The reaction of Japan to the visit of Secretary of the Navy Denby has been distinctly favorable and he has made a tremendous impression on the press, which hails him as a friend of Japan working for the peace of the Pacific. It is pointed out that his visit will promote friendship and lead to future arms limitations.

The American party and Japanese officials decorated the Perry monument today, and a grove of American oaks was planted around the monument.

A dinner given by Baron Shibusawa ended the program of entertainment this evening. Secretary Denby will spend the week-end at Nikko.
