'Fishing' Good for This Burglar, Who

Ingenuity is the middle name of some unidentified burglar who early this morning "fished" four suits out Phil Tobin's tailor shop, No. 2081/2

The thief entered an attic through a ventilator over the shop and plunged his foot through the plastered ceiling. Then with a 12-foot pole he made by lapping shingles and wrapping them with strips torn from his shirt, the burglar pulled the suits through the ceiling. Police Inspector Persinger found the thief had pulled the shingles from the

By Thornton W. Burgess Even though you feel you know, Try to prove a thing is so. —Farmer Brown's Boys

WHEN Farmer Brown's Boy reached W home without any fish he didn't say a word about the trout he had caught and had had stolen from the tree on which he had hung it. He knew that Farmer Brown would laugh at him if he said that Lightfoot the Deer had eaten that trout, and Farmer Brown's Boy didn't like to be laughed at. Few people do.

So he said nothing about it, but the very next day went fishing again. This time he wasn't fishing for himself. No, sir, he wasn't fishing for himself. He was fishing for Lightfoot the Deer He knew that those tracks he had found the day before had told him the true story of what had become of that trout, but he wanted to see with his own eyes Lightfoot eat a trout. And so as he fished Farmer Brown's Boy was planning to prove the story of those tracks.

This time he had better luck, and in short time he had caught seven nice trout. Then he stopped fishing. Taking one of these trout, he hung it on the same tree where he had hung the trout the day before. Then he went off a short distance and hid where he could peep out and watch that tree without himself being seen by any one who might happen along that way. "If Lightfoot really likes trout he will remember the treat he had yesterday and will come back today to see if he can find another fish," thought Farmer Brown's Boy. "All I need do is to be patient and wait."

So Farmer Brown's Boy made himed and waited and waited. It was very that trout. still there in the Green Forest and the gurgle of the Laughing Brook. It was nearer and nearer to that tree. Per-

For a few moments after the snapping of that twig he saw nothing. Then from behind a pile of brush stepped Lightfoot the Deer. He was lieving."

brown. Very handsome he looked as he stood with head held high and big ears slightly forward to catch every little sound. His antlers, which most folks call horns, were about half grown, and were in the velvet. That is, they were covered with a soft, velvety skin. For a long time Lightfoot stood motionless. It was plain that he was suspicious. He was looking and listening, and with his nose was testing every Merry Little Breeze that came along. Finally he walked over to a little clump of grass and took a mouthful, then threw up his head to look and listen while he ate it. Thief Steals Booze; Victim Reports His Sorrow to Police Burglars who Friday night entered the home of D. W. Morehouse, No. 659 East Seventh street, took $400 worth of loot—and a bottle of genuine * * * labeled whiskey.

Morehouse had the courage to report the theft of the latter to police. It had been in the attic for at least four years, waiting for a "rainy day."

The jewelry, revolver, camera and clothing the thieves took were worth about $400. But the owner this morning admitted that the theft of his treasure was the "worst blow of all."
