Travel Is Heavy on Long-Bell Ferry Kelso, Wash., Aug. 2.—The Long-Bell ferry carried a total of 602 automobiles from the Long-Bell landing at the mill site just south of Kelso, to Rainier Sunday. Practically all travel is crossing from Kelso to Rainier because of the pavement from Rainier to Portland instead of the rough highway from Kelso to Kalama and because the Long-Bell company's rate for ferrying is less than from Kalama to Goble.

Brilliant Trimmings Emphasize the Simple Lines of the Mode This smart afternoon frock adapts the favored petal motif in a new and interesting manner. Developed in navy blue crepe de chine, an approved color contrast is achieved by the addition of a girde and bands of vivid red crepe. The wide sleeve, caught in at the wrist with a tight cuff, is a charming detail. The frock at the right is an excellent example of the best type of street frock. It is of navy blue or black (will finish with flat crepe braid). Paris is making marked use of black or blue coat-dresses.

BURGESS' BEDTIME STORIES

By Thornton W. Burgess One Fear Overcomes Another Fear

"It's true, although it sounds most queer. That fear is overcome by fear. Sooty the Chimney Swift. PETER RABBIT, on the bank of the Big River, was so excited that he couldn't keep still. He had seen Sooty the Chimney Swift meet with an accident out over the very middle of the Big River and fall into the water. At first he didn't know what had become of Sooty. He looked for him to rise from the water again, but Sooty didn't.

"Oh, dear!" cried Peter. "Can it be that Sooty has been drowned?" Then something moving far out on the water caught his attention. At first all he could see was a little black spot that seemed to be moving. It seemed to be flopping along on the surface of the water. It would disappear behind a wave and then he would see it again on the top of the next little wave. At last he made out what it was. "It's Sooty!" cried Peter. "And he is trying to reach shore. Oh, I'm so glad Sooty isn't drowned. I hope nothing will happen to him before he gets to shore. It was just then that Peter's long ears caught the sound of footsteps, heavy footsteps, behind him. He turned to look hastily. There was Farmer Brown's Boy, coming over to the Big River. Peter ducked down and then crept behind a little bush from which he could watch Sooty and at the same time keep an eye on Farmer Brown's Boy.

Farmer Brown's Boy came straight down to the edge of the Big River and there he stood, looking out across the water. Almost at once he caught sight of a little black object on top of the water. This was a queer-looking thing that Farmer Brown's Boy, as he watched it draw nearer. "I wonder what it can be. It can't be a fish, and I don't know of any other thing that swims like that. In a few minutes Sooty was near enough for Farmer Brown's Boy to see clearly. "As I live I exclaimed here, look! It's Sooty the Chimney Swift!" He has fallen into the water and can't get back into the air. If he keeps on, he'll come ashore here, look! It will be worse than a big fish doesn't snap him up before he gets here."

Beach Flappers to Come Under Eyes of Bathing Suit Censor Portland bathing beaches are due for a "clean-up" Thursday afternoon, when Chief of Police L. V. Jenkins and a committee of four Portland newspaper men will investigate charges that bathing costumes are not what they should be.

Complaints about bathers have not been very numerous this year, and those which have been received at police headquarters relate more to the "smiles and nothing more" which juveniles wear than to the styles which the more mature bathers exhibit.

Other members of the censorship committee are James S. Sheehy, Laurence G. Smith and Reuel S. Moore.
