

WHOLE EPISCOPAL BODY VIRTUALLY TO COME HERE

Seven Departments of Church to Be Moved Here From New York for September Meeting.

During September Portland will virtually be the headquarters of the Episcopal church in America. Announcement was made at the ocean office Saturday that the seven departments of the church at New York city, would be moved almost bodily to Portland for the month, so that leaders can keep in touch with the proceedings of the general convention. Headquarters of the executive committee will be set up in the 11 halls at the Labor Temple, Fourth and Jefferson streets. Bishop W. T. Sumner received a highly complimentary letter from the New York office in which the work of the local convention halls committee was praised. The officials were especially grateful because the Central Labor Council had agreed to turn over its halls to the church for almost an entire month. They were pleased to learn that such fine suite of rooms had been provided so close to the Auditorium.

SECRETARY IS PLEASED
"Never before in the history of the church has so many halls been tendered," said John W. Lehigh, executive secretary of the diocese. "Portland has also provided better halls, in that it will not be necessary for us to hold any of our meetings in dens or dark basements."

The convention headquarters will be at the Auditorium. The north wing has been set aside for the house of bishops, the south wing for the women's auxiliary and the main room for the house of deputies. An information booth will be erected in the main lobby and the offices of the diocese of Oregon will be moved for the month from the Almsworth building to a room under the north stairs.

The rooms on the second floor not occupied by the Oregon Historical society will be used as convention and committee rooms, and also for the exhibition of church books and missionary supplies.

POSTAL SUB-STATION
Postmaster Jones has deemed the convention of enough importance to order a sub-station installed in the basement of the Auditorium, to care for the increased volume of mail. Members of the Seaman's Institute will assist the superintendent in the handling of the mail.

An intercommunicating telephone system also will be provided between all the rooms of the building. Other divisions of the basement will be made to care for the work of the Seaman's Institute, which will be under the direction of the Rev. W. T. Weston, organization secretary, to provide a rest room for women and a lounge and smoking room for men; a social hall, motion picture hall and a large restaurant capable of seating 1000 persons. In the restaurant, lunch will be served each noon to the official deputies, and in the afternoon tea will be served visiting women by the various parishes.

On September 4, 5 and 6 the Auditorium will be a general registration room, where a card of the names of those under the direction of William Whitfield, will register all visitors.

ROOMS AT LIBRARY
The convention halls committee, of which C. D. Porter is chairman, has also secured fine halls and rooms in the Central library. The tentative program shows that all of these rooms will be continuously occupied for the first two weeks of the convention by the various committees and study classes which form a part of the woman's auxiliary.

One of the largest mass meetings of the convention, the meeting of the Church Women's League for Patriotic Service, will be held in the auditorium of the First Presbyterian church. The Unitarian church also has been designated as the meeting place for the St. Barnabas guild and the Girls' Friendly society.

Other downtown churches have also tendered the use of their buildings, including their Sunday school houses, but definite assignments have not been made as yet to any more churches, because the committee program has not arrived from the New York office.

Hospital Wards of State Receive Gift
Salem, Aug. 12.—A check for $500 has been received by Dr. R. E. Le Stelner, superintendent of the state hospital for the insane here, from Mrs. Josephine E. Walker, a generous philanthropist of San Francisco, who asks that the sum be applied to the amusement fund for the benefit of the hospital inmates. The donation, it is explained, is made because of kindness shown a woman patient, a friend of Mrs. Walker.

Many Old-timers to Leave House After Present Session—La Follette Assails High Tariff Builders—Senator Gooding Inspires Verse.

Old Guard Ranks In House Decimated

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—(WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE JOURNAL)—The ranks of the old guard in the house are being badly decimated by the results of the primaries, the latest victims of the voters being Representative Philip Pitt Campbell of Kansas, chairman of the rules committee and a probable candidate for speaker had secured another term.

Combined with the voluntary retirement of several veterans, the loss in the old guard ranks means that there must be a complete reorganization of the party machinery in the next house, and that without regard to whether the Republicans retain control or lose it to the Democrats, as some of the signs may be taken to indicate. If they keep a majority, it will be largely diminished, and the leadership will in large part be new, because so many of the old faces will have departed.

Take for example the very powerful rules committee, with eight Republican members. Campbell, the chairman, is defeated. Roderberg of Illinois, third in rank, is retiring at the end of 10 terms, 20 years. Fess of Ohio, fourth in rank, has quit to make the race for the senate. All these are of the hard-shell type. The progressive members will make a fight to increase their representation on the committee, where they now have two, Johnson of South Dakota and Schall of Minnesota, who are at the foot of the list in rank.

Mondell of Wyoming, floor leader, quits to try for the senate; Fordney, chairman of ways and means, has had enough and retires; Walsh of Massachusetts, many times speaker pro-tem, has resigned to go on the bench; "Hose Joe" Cannon is quitting; Kelley of Michigan and Greene of Vermont are running for the senate and will be out of the house; Reavis of Nebraska resigned to take up war fraud cases; Copley of Illinois has been defeated for renomination; Husted of New York will retire, and Houghton of that state has become ambassador to Germany.

Nearly the whole front line is thus taken out of the organization, and men newer in service and less known to the country must advance to their places. In the choice that is made the party will have an unusual opportunity to promote its future by naming men of independent type, who are not tarred with the mistakes of unfortunate leadership.

Of the present rulers of the house, Speaker Gillett, Madden of Illinois, Longworth of Ohio and Greene and "Hose Joe" Cannon are practically the only survivors. Longworth's stock as a candidate for floor leader goes up with Campbell's defeat. Green will take Fordney's place as chairman of ways and means, which makes an improvement from the standpoint of those who believe in progressive policies of taxation and revenue.

James R. Mann of Illinois, former leader, who entered the house in 1897, is expected to come back. While his activity has been to some degree lessened by the years, he is still referred to as the greatest personal influence in the house. He is a regular, but has sharply disagreed with the present leadership and operates often as a free lance. His influence will no doubt be for the introduction of new blood and more decisive leadership than the Mondell regime has produced.

La Follette Flails Tariff Makers
WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—(WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE JOURNAL)—The tariff makers in the house are being assailed by Senator La Follette, who is making a strong case for a tariff bill in a patriotic and non-partisan spirit, "not as flockmasters or owners of cotton or woolen mills or stockholders in steel and sugar mills," was expressed by Senator La Follette, making his first speech on the tariff bill since the present debate began.

"When that time comes," he added, "senators will submit to 'no infernal juggling' of the schedule such as he charged is being done at the present time with the cotton schedule, which he has been giving particular study. He explained that the bill had been drawn to define the measurement of yarn by number by a new scheme unknown to the trade, which would require careful consideration by experts to tell its effect.

"You might just as well say that for the purpose of this bill a yard shall be 34 inches, or 15 ounces shall be considered a pound," exclaimed La Follette.

"But if they did that, it would be easily detected and understood," remarked Senator Pomerene (D., Ohio). "Yes, that would be understood," La Follette agreed. "To get away with it it has to be done in skeins and hanks and threads."

La Follette then pointed out that the Republican members of the senate finance committee, meeting from day to day, are making constant changes in rates and presenting amendments on the floor of the senate making substantial departures from the printed rates in the bill. These changes, made without notice, put at a disadvantage those who had prepared to discuss the rates contained in the bill and compare them with the Underwood or Payne-Aldrich rates.

"I cannot for the life of me understand why senators on my side of the senate," he said, turning to his Republican colleagues, "persist in budgeting rates in this bill in many cases above the Payne-Aldrich rates, when they must know that this means higher living costs, greater burdens for consumers and disaster to their party."

Gooding's Sheep Provokes Poetry
Washington, Aug. 12.—(WASHINGTON BUREAU OF THE JOURNAL)—Senator Frank R. Gooding's 3000 sheep, fixed on the tariff schedule, inspired senator himself during debate over the "wool senators." Inspired Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska to burst into poetry. Hitchcock produced the following:

"Gooding had eight thousand sheep,
Their fleeces were white as snow;
And everywhere that Gooding went
The sheep were sure to go.

"They followed him by night and day,
It was against the rule—
They filled the statesman with dismay,
They roared high the wool schedule.

"And when the people found it out
Their rage began to wax;
They knew the presence of those sheep
Meant heavy tariff taxing.

"But if the wool on Gooding's sheep
Were not so white as snow,
Then we must grin and bear it."

Gooding's sheep came into prominence when Senator Caraway challenged the propriety of wool growers senators voting upon high protective rates that would put money in their own pockets. Although Gooding is far below Senator Stanfield of Oregon as a flock master, he is fiery and prolix in defending himself, and thus became the chief target in the controversy.

Gooding explained to the senate that he owns only a few sheep out west, and that he is practically the only sheep raiser in the east. Later he placed the number in his flocks at 8000. The people of Idaho knew he owned sheep when they elected him, he said, and he led the ticket. Like Stanfield, he declared he would not desert the interests of the wool growers or take a back seat merely because he owns sheep himself.
