FASHIONS REALM

Paris, Aug. 31.—The three-quarter length coat has been adopted by Paris from the American mode, but Paris gives it her own distinctive touch. Hence a stunning ragnan of perline in marine blue has a wide beige braid piping the edges and outlining the big, triangular pockets which fasten with large, triangular buttons of wood.

London, Aug. 31.—The petal gown reached its apotheosis in a dance frock worn at a country house Wednesday by a famous light haired beauty. The light hair is important because the gown was in shades of pink which are best set off by hair of ash blonde type. Simply made, the gown was completely covered with chiffon petals from hem to neck.

Paris, Aug. 31.—Paris today had a new idea for its cretonne gown. It is a bolero jacket effect made by a wide band of plain colored linen. A cretonne gown has two wide linen bands of henna or green running down the front and separating to circle the waistline.

New York, Aug. 31.—Even in sports models the new fur coats are distinctly longer. Many shown today are full length, coming to a point not far above the ankle. Many of the capes are of the crissle sort with wide armholes. The chinchin collar billows up over the hat in back and in front hides the tip of the nose.

New York, Aug. 31.—There are two new shades, each a vivid one which will undoubtedly brighten the city. One is coral-red, which as its name implies, is a very gay red. And there is Jeanne D'Arc blue, rich and lovely, shown generally today for the first time. Among other colors which will be fashionable shades are fusia gold and canary yellow.

Little Theatre Will Reopen Tonight as Community Cinema

Portland's list of theatres will be increased tonight by the reopening of the Little theatre at 23d and Washington as the Portland home of Community cinema. It will feature film entertainment with special vaudeville and musical nights.

The Little theatre, formerly the home of the Drama league, has been entirely redecorated by the firm of John Stark & Co. The exterior has been rebuilt adding to the attractiveness of what has always been considered one of the finest up-town auditoriums in the city. It is one of the few up-town theatres to have a circulating ventilating system equal to that of the best of the larger theatres.

Community cinema has heretofore been a non-profit cooperative organization operating only on the Chautauqua plan. Feeling that Portland would appreciate this same sort of entertainment service the company takes over one of the Portland theatres and operate it on a commercial basis while still maintaining the community idea.

The Portland house manager is Norman W. Harrap. Frank Hayward, long identified with the suburban theatre as well as film production, will be the director in charge of special programs.

The opening picture is "The Sheik," George Arliss, in "The Devil," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "The Inside of the Cup," "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," "Bunny Pulls the Strings," and "Honest Hutch," are some of the well known best stories of the year that are booked for immediate showing at the Little.

AUTO DEALER ACCUSED Roseburg, Aug. 31.—A warrant was issued Wednesday for the arrest of Ed Tigh, automobile dealer of Aehl-land, charging violation of the motor vehicle laws by selling a car to Earl King, and allowing him to drive it to this city under dealers' license plates.

Only Daughter of Gen. Grant, White House Bride, Dies

Chicago, Aug. 31.—The body of Mrs. Frank Hatch Jones, only daughter of Ulysses S. Grant, who died here Wednesday, will be buried in Springfield, Ill., the home of Abraham Lincoln.

Mrs. Jones, known to Americans a generation ago, as Nellie Grant, the girl who went into the White House in 1861, and came out the bride of an English army officer, Captain Algernon Sartoris, is survived by a son and a daughter, Algernon and Vivian Sartoris, who are in Europe.

The marriage to Captain Sartoris followed a shipboard courtship and was held in the East room of the White House in 1874. They separated shortly before his death in 1893. A special act of congress restored her American citizenship to Mrs. Jones, then Mrs. Sartoris.

The second marriage took place in 1912. Mrs. Jones was born in Wistonwich, Missouri, July 4, 1855, and lived for a time in a log cabin built by her soldier father. She had been an invalid for several years prior to her death.

Mrs. Jones was an aunt of Mrs. Edmund C. King of No. 647 North 24th street, Portland.

From Paris - secrets of summer-time freshness

From Paris, Monsieur Kerkoff, creator of Djer-Kiss sends to the American ladies this message:

"Summer coolness, comfort and protection; these you may enjoy by employing my French poudres—Talc Djer-Kiss and Djer-Kiss Face Powder. So delicate they are—so pure—so soothing to tender skins! From Paris itself, they are indeed the day's mode in poudres.

"Remember, too, Madame, they are fragrant always with the French fragrance of Parfum Djer-Kiss."

TALC FACE POWDER

BURGESS' BEDTIME STORIES

The Smart Little Fox Spies Something By Thornton W. Burgess If to yourself you will be true, Use all the talents given you.

OUT on a big stone in the Laughing Brook sat a half grown little fox. He was the smartest of the four children of Reddy Fox. He had proved himself the smartest because he hadn't given up trying to find his father as had the three other young foxes. Reddy, Reddy and his four children were playing a game of hide-and-seek, a game that really was a lesson, though the young foxes didn't know this. Reddy had gone off and hidden and the four youngsters had followed his trail until it ended at the Laughing Brook.

"This young fox wouldn't give up. He was sure his father was hiding where he could be found if only he were smart enough to find him. He was sure his father hadn't gone where he couldn't be followed. 'It must be that he did cross the Laughing Brook,' after all," thought the little fox, "and expected us to be smart enough to get across on these big stones. Anyway, I am going to keep right on across and find out. I'll never be satisfied until I do."

He looked at the swiftly running water between the stone he sat on and the next one. "Father told us that water is our best friend in time of danger. The other day mother told us the same thing. Perhaps it is, but I don't like so much of it," said he. "I wish these stones were nearer together. Well, here goes!"

With this the little fox jumped for the next big stone. It really surprised him to find how easily he made that jump. He was now in the middle of the Laughing Brook. Once more he sat down to gain courage for the next jump. He looked up the Laughing Brook and he looked down the Laughing Brook. From there he could see his mother and his brother and sisters sitting at the place way down the Laughing Brook where the trail of his father had ended. About half way to them was a big rock right in the middle of the Laughing Brook. The little fox hardly noticed it at first. But presently he noticed that the top of that big rock wasn't like the top of other rock there. It wasn't like the tops of other rocks.

The little fox sat up a little straighter and looked sharply. The top of that big rock was reddish. There was no doubt about it. The little fox stared and stared. Presently a Merry Little Breeze went dancing over that big rock. The little fox blinked his eyes two or three times. It seemed to him that the top of that big rock had moved ever so little. Another Merry Little Breeze danced over it. This time the little fox was sure. An idea popped into his funny little head.

"Your eyes may fool you, but you can always trust your nose," was what Mother Fox had taught the young foxes. The little fox remembered this. "I believe," said he, "that if I can get where the Merry Little Breezes will blow in my face from the direction of that big rock I will find out something. I believe there is some one on that big rock, but I cannot trust my eyes." The smart little fox held up his moist little black nose to find out which way the wind was coming from. Then he kept on across the Laughing Brook by means of these big stones, jumping from one to another, until at last he was safely on the bank. As soon as he reached the bank he started down the Laughing Brook. He didn't keep his nose to the ground now, for he wasn't thinking of finding his father's track there. He kept his nose in the air and with every step he sniffed. (Copyright, 1922, by T. W. Burgess.) The next story: "The Smart Little Fox Finds Reddy."
