Dictionary of Baby Terms

"C" Continued

CONVULSIONS. Disturbances of digestion are the most frequent causes of convulsions. They may also occur at the onset of acute diseases such as pneumonia, scarlet fever and whooping cough. Convulsions should be treated by giving an enema of warm soap suds and by placing the baby in a bath tub of warm water. Always test the water with a thermometer or your elbow. Add a tablespoonful of mustard to the water. After the bath dry the baby gently but quickly and keep him warm in bed. Put a cold compress on his head. A dose of castor oil should be given after the bath when the child recovers consciousness. You should always call a physician if your baby has convulsions.

COIC is one of the great trials of babyhood. It is caused by indigestion due to overfeeding, too frequent feeding, improper feeding or an excess of curd or protein in the milk. In breast fed babies it may be caused by worry, fatigue or an improper diet on the part of the mother. Cold feet or catching cold will also cause colic. The baby's cry is sharp and hard. It comes suddenly and returns every few minutes. Give baby plenty of plain, unsweetened, boiled water, warmed to blood heat. It is best given from the bottle, as in that way baby goes off to sleep more easily. This should be given in a glass. A plain water enema will often give relief. The enema should be injected very slowly. If baby's colic has been caused by a chill, it is well to place him in a warm bath for five or 10 minutes, wrapping him up warmly as soon as he is taken out of the bath. Sometimes a little wind in the stomach

Fishing in Diamond Lake Termed Good; Knockers Answered

Contrary to published reports regarding Diamond lake, 16 miles north of Crater lake, the best fishing is to be had with beetles or other parasites than other sportmen's retreats, according to A. D. Vandergriff, who has had considerable experience in fishing Diamond Lake Improvement company. Vandergriff and his family have moved here for the winter.

"Diamond lake is a pure mountain stream," said Vandergriff, "and is ideal for fishing. There is an abundance of fish and there is no alarm to be felt about the conditions there. A fish hatchery is located two miles from the lake and it never will be fished out for there is a natural feed for the rainbow trout."

The row from Crater lake to Diamond lake is in good order and the forest service has just completed its share making the lake accessible by automobile. The lake has secure accommodations and further information by writing to the Diamond Lake Improvement company at Medford, Or.

"As far as the beetles infesting the place, as some disgruntled traveler reported, and that the water was unfit to drink, there is hardly a word of truth in it. Like any mountain lake there is always to be found a certain number, but the forest service has men in the Diamond lake and Crater lake regions at all times, watching the timber for just such things and they know nothing of any such 'terrible things.'"

Comic Opera And Orchestra New Activities

MANY new activities in the local field of music are being announced and from all appearances the coming season will be an exceptionally busy one. It was officially announced a few weeks ago by Mrs. E. L. Thompson, president, that the Portland Opera Association would present Verdi's tuneful opera, "Ernani," in the fall at the Auditorium, and in a few days rehearsals will begin. Another announcement of interest comes from Mr. De La Parelle, baritone, who recently came from Spokane to this city, that he will present two comic operas during the season, the first of which will be Planquette ever popular "Chimes of Normandy." Mr. De La Parelle invites all Portland singers to try for positions in the chorus. The voice principals will be held in Mr. De La Parelle's studio in the Tilford building.

Another new activity is the organization of an orchestra to be composed of about 70 semi-professional musicians, whose number in Portland is large. This project is being headed by A. L. Clifton, who says that already a large number of tentative members has been enrolled. The organization is to be known as the Portland Civic Symphony orchestra. Harry Linden, former member of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, will be the conductor, and J. G. Maybrund is secretary.

Portland has an ability to appreciate and finance a symphonic orchestra. Behind the scenes in the office of the Sherman "Ray" building at Sixth and Morrison, there is a certain bubbling of interest which surpasses that of any other season. The sale of season tickets goes on briskly, and there is every prospect that the orchestra and its eminent soloists will concertize to capacity houses this winter.

What is there in symphonic music that is so alluring? The grandeur of the mere sound is inspiring. There is a spell in its harmonies. There is a magic in the very ring of its melodies. Once the listener is thrall to a symphonic orchestra he will have a passion for hearing it at every opportunity. A letter to the manager says: "I was out of work for several months last winter, but I never missed a symphonic concert over a five or six days without something else." There's an enthusiast, if you like!

And there are others like him.

One of the high lights on the September list of new Victor records is Ignace Paderewski's playing of one of his own compositions, Nocturne in B flat. It is the first record the famous Polish pianist has made since his return to the piano after having participated in reshaping the politics of Central Europe, in the capacity of premier of Poland, although Paderewski primarily won his sensational successes by thunderous playing. This particular work, as are many of his other compositions, is of a high quality and its beauty lies in its quality of tone rather than quantity. It is a poetic inspiration. Other new records are the "Mangrove Overture," played by the famous Philadelphia symphonic orchestra, the Creole song, "Ay-Ay-Ay," sung by Tito Schipa, tenor; "Lead, Kindly Light," by Ernestine Schumann-Heink, and a variety of other records, including seductive dance numbers.

Miss Sylvia Weinstein, violinist, and Miss Susie Michael, pianist, have recently returned from advanced study in the East and will again resume their musical activities in this city for the coming season. Miss Weinstein is an accomplished violinist, being a pupil of Franz Kneisel of New York, and appeared in successful concert here last September. Miss Michael coached the last season with Victor Heintze of Chicago. Miss Weinstein and Miss Michael will make their first public appearance of this season in the concert season they will be heard in joint concert.

Mrs. Robert Corruccini has returned from a two months' vacation in the Middle West and Canadian Rockies. Mrs. Corruccini delighted old friends with informal concerts at several points on her route. She has a number of comment upon her work: "Broken Bow has affectionate remembrance of the cello-like quality of Mrs. Corruccini's voice and she was delighted to hear once more the fully developed richness of tone that still characterizes her singing. Precision of tone, gracious manner and Thursday morning afforded a most delightful evening."

Mrs. Mae O'Neill Feldman, soprano, an artist student with Signor Corruccini, has been chosen the Portland Opera Association for the leading part of Elvira in Verdi's opera, "Ernani," to be produced in late fall. Mrs. Feldman splendidly equipped as to voice and experience, and will prove herself a decided acquisition to the vocal colony of Portland. She came here recently from Salt Lake, Utah.

Mrs. Clifford Moore, the child music specialist, is planning a unique series of regular recitals to be given to the music students of all ages, especially the beginners. These tests are of a basic nature of mind which are necessary for success in music and help in the recognition, the analysis and guidance of musical talent. Mrs. Moore has returned from a motor trip through California and a month at Seaside and will reopen her studios September 11.

Miss Margaret Notz, well known pianist and organist of Portland, has recently returned from Berkeley, Cal., where she attended the summer season of the University of California. Miss Notz will be associated with the Ellison-White Conservatory this season as instructor of piano and coach of voice.

Mrs. A. E. Gardner has returned from an extended trip of seven months to Boston, Mass., Portland, Me., and New Hampshire points. While East Klahr at the New England Conservatory in Boston. Mrs. Gardner reopened her studio September 11 in the Eilers building.

The Tilford studio, devoted to music and art, has opened for the season and is being conducted by Miss Gladys Forde and Miss V. Griethuysen.

The Misses Cella and Harriet Ward have returned from their two months' vacation and will resume their teaching for the season.

Mordant A. Goodnow, pianist, has returned from a three weeks' vacation spent in the Adirondack district. He plans for this season a number of recitals and public appearances.
