What is your remedy for exces-

dustry, caught in the maelstrom

In answer to your questionnaire reinterrogatories, I beg to repeat said interrogatories and to state my an-questing my attitude on certain social and economic problems, I respectfully submit herewith my views.

1—Is the question of economic injustice the paramount issue of the hour?

Answer-If you have reference to the Eighteen years ago, in 1904, the Direct Primary Nominations league of Oregon stood back of the direct primary bill throughout the campaign which resulted in its becoming a law by the vote of the people.

TO CALL MEETING

Some of the men who were members of this league and who took a leading part in fostering the success of the primary law have died, but many of them are still alive and interested in faulty and remediable organization of the society.

The suggestion has 2—Would you make a living wage still of the treasury, service last week after 31 years as been made, and will be acted upon acted first charge against industry? Answer-Yes; a living wage is indispensably the first charge—otherwise, workmen in it would be wanting. The wage earner is entitled to more than a bare existence; he should have a saving wage, something sufficient to maintain himself and his family in comfort and to afford schooling, social contacts and the higher things of life. In fact, sufficient to own his own home and rear his family without it becoming peace and good will on earth. No rational mind will deny paramounter. Economic justice is not only the paramount issue of the hour, but should be and eventually must be the rule of human conduct in carrying out the divine injunction that by the sweat of his brow man shall eat. rear his family without it becoming necessary for the wife and children to be wage earners. In brief, I would make something more than a bare living wage, a fair minimum wage, the first charge against industry.

3—What practical remedy do you propose for unemployment?

Answer—(1) More rigid restrictions

Since labor is the prime element in production, all labor is entitled to an equitable share in the product of industry, and no industry can prosper which denies a wage permitting life in accord with the standard adopted by a on immigration; (2) better co-operative marketing facilities; (3) closer cooperation of city, county, state and nafree people blessed with abundant na-tural resources. tional governments pertaining to labor conditions; (4) public works and im-provements of all kinds inaugurated during periods of depression and in sea-sons of unemployment; (5) the con-3—"What practical remedy do you propose for unemployment?"
