"The Discovery of America Was an Accident"

—such is the characteristic introduction to a daily series of short articles on

American History

BY

Hendrik Van Loon

which will be a feature of The Journal, beginning

Tomorrow

Each chapter is illustrated in fascinating fashion

Who Van Loon Is

VAN LOON, HENDRIK WILHELM—Lecturer and author. Born in Holland, 1882. Studied at Harvard and University of Munich. Associated Press correspondent during the Russian Revolution and again during the World War. Has been a lecturer on history and history of art in various American universities. Was professor of history in the University of Wisconsin before the war and is now professor of history in Antioch college. He is the author of "Fall of the Dutch Republic," "Rise of the Dutch Kingdom," "Golden Book of the Dutch Navigators." He is better known for his books written for children—"A Short History of Discovery," "Ancient Man" and "The Story of Mankind."

What and How He Writes

"Van Loon tells the history of the world in a manner that young or old will not soon forget. There is only one word that describes Van Loon's originality, his subtle wisdom, his love and understanding of children, his reduction of complex material to lucid and dramatic simplicity; and that word is genius. His is the genius of a Lewis Carroll, a Jean Henri Fabre."

"It is easier to read Van Loon's book than to describe it. The author has taken the hardest, not the easiest, way to his goal, for he deals primarily with movements and ideas, not with heroes and picturesque incidents. Nevertheless, the book reads like a fascinating story, told by a master story teller. Knowledge, humor, imagination are brought into play."

"Quite as delightful as the text are the numerous pictures, drawings, sketches, maps, diagrams and cartoons, all executed by the author himself. The text and illustrations are one and inseparable; they illuminate each other and likewise reveal the author's original and almost fantastic personality. Some of the illustrations are combinations of diagram, map and cartoon, and are ex-cruciatingly funny."—The Nation.

He has just been awarded the John Newberry medal by the children's Librarian's section of the American Library association "for the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children" produced within the year 1921—"The Story of Mankind." This book, which was written primarily for his two young sons, has been enthusiastically read by both children and grownups.

Authentic historical facts related in a way that appeals to boys and girls—and grown-ups, too.

Parents will commend this to their children and read it for themselves.
