

MEDICAL SCHOOL TO OPEN MIDDLE OF NEXT MONTH

While dedication of MacKenzie hall, the new unit of the University of Oregon school of medicine, will not take place before the middle of October, work on the structure is so far advanced that students will find the various departments of the school equipped so they may undertake their studies without delay after registration the first of next month.

Dr. Richmond B. Dillehunt, dean of the school, said today that the department of bacteriology has already installed its equipment and would be ready for work at once if necessary. The new laboratories and lecture rooms of the department of chemistry are practically complete. Members of the faculty are on hand to oversee the installation of furnishings and equipment in the various departments.

Workmen this week are completing the installation of oil tanks as part of the heating plant. Heating of the building by fuel oil in the fall will result in a material saving over the former method of heating, according to Dr. Dillehunt.

Portland residents will be enabled now to get an excellent view of the buildings of the school of medicine on Marquam hill since a clump of fir trees that stood in front of the structures was felled this week. Beautification of the grounds has begun. The major part of the grading work has been completed and the inner court, where pedestrians and vehicles approach MacKenzie hall, is being paved. The dedication ceremony will be an important one in the life of the University of Oregon, Dr. Dillehunt hopes. State and city officials, the medical fraternity of Portland and other communities and others interested in the work of health advancement will be invited to attend. The complete program will not be announced before next month.
