BURGESS' BEDTIME STORIES

Reddy and Mrs. Reddy Investigate

By Thornton W. Burgess

WHEN Sammy Jay told Reddy Fox what he had seen happen over at Farmer Brown's, and how one of Reddy's children was a prisoner in a barrel back of the henhouse, Reddy hardly knew whether to believe it or not.

"I think Sammy told the truth," said Reddy. "At least, I think that youngster of ours is in trouble of some kind."

"Why do you think so?" asked Mrs. Reddy. "You know as well as I do that there is nothing Sammy Jay would enjoy more than getting us up there for nothing."

"True enough," replied Reddy. "The Hound is barking as he barks only when he has some one cornered. I heard him when he first started out and he was crying 'Fox! Fox! Fox! Fox!' at the top of his lungs."

"We are going to go up there and find out for ourselves just what has happened," said Mrs. Reddy in her most decided way.

So together they started for Farmer Brown's. They went the same way the young Fox had gone, keeping in the bushes along the stone wall on the edge of the Old Orchard.

Neither Reddy nor Mrs. Reddy could understand how one of their children could possibly be in that barrel. They must find out in some way if one really was. It might be some one else who was in that barrel. They must in-vest-i-gate, which means, as you know, find out about something.

"I think Sammy told the truth," said Reddy.

Very carefully they looked for Farmer Brown or Farmer Brown's Boy. Neither was to be seen anywhere.

Bowser the Hound was the only one in sight and neither of them really feared Bowser; they had fooled him too many times to doubt that they could fool him again.

So long as he was there it would be impossible to find out about that barrel and who was in it, if any one was.

"You'll have the lead him away," whispered Mrs. Reddy. "If you can lead him away I can run over to that barrel and find out if any one is in it. All you will need to do is to keep him busy and away from here while I look into the matter. I do hope none of the children has been foolish enough to come up here, after the warning I gave them. But you never can tell what a youngster will do."

Bowser walked over to the barrel and sniffed at it. He went all the way around it, sniffing. Then he returned to the place where he had been sitting and again sat down to watch.

The next story: "Bowser is Led Away."

Widow of Wagner, Famous Composer, Is Seriously Ill

(By United Press)

Chicago, Oct. 16.—Cosima Wagner, widow of Richard Wagner, the famous German composer, is near death at her home in Balthus, Germany, according to a cablegram received here by Vittorio Arimondi, basso profundo of the Chicago Opera company.

The cablegram failed to state the nature of Frau Wagner's illness.

Frau Wagner was the daughter of Franz List, the Hungarian music master, and was once known in the music world as Queen Cosima I. of Balthus.

Her first husband was von Buelow, the pianist. In 1914, her daughter, Frau Isolde Biedler, entered a suit to determine whether she was the child of von Buelow or Wagner. The case still remains unsettled.
