THE OLYMPIA SENATORIAL FIGHT.

The Squire's Men Obtain a Caucus Call—Disgraceful Squabble.

OLYMPIA, Jan. 20.—There was great joy at Senator Squire's headquarters to-day from the fact that a call for a caucus had been agreed upon and made ready. The next thing was to read the call for a caucus in the lobby of the Hotel Olympia, which was crowded almost to suffocation, there being about 400 persons in it, very few of whom knew that fifty-six republicans had signed the call. John H. McGraw, of Seattle, Senator Squire's manager, wanted a member of the legislature outside of King county to read it, but none could be found, and Representative S. Meany, of King, was selected. Senator Squire's headquarters is at the head of the main stairway which leads into the lobby. Half way down the stairway is a wide landing. Representative Meany took his station on the landing, but as no trouble was expected no one accompanied him to protect him. He then called for order in the lobby. The noisy talk ceased and 400 men turned their faces toward him. A hush fell over the crowd when he announced that he had a call for a republican caucus, which he proceeded to read. There was no disturbance until he finished, when the Calkins men groaned and hissed and the Squire men cheered.

"This call," shouted Representative Meany, as he swung his hands enthusiastically in the air, "is signed by fifty-six republican members of the legislature of Washington."

Groans and cheers and hurrahs for both Squire and Calkins greeted this announcement. Nelson Bennett, who is Judge Calkins' manager, and ex-Code Commissioner W. H. Doolittle, of Tacoma, were standing in the front of the crowd on the floor and shouted at the tops of their voices.

"Give the names, Meany," shouted ex-Sheriff McCraw, who was on the landing. Then followed an exhibition of rowdiness that is without parallel in the history of Washington politics. Representative Meany tried to read the names, but his voice could not be heard above the din raised by the Calkins men on the floor. They hissed Squire and cheered Calkins, and tried in every way to drown Meany's voice. All of a sudden Nelson Bennett and Doolittle were seen to break away from the crowd and press their way to the landing, shouting loudly for Calkins. Reaching the landing Bennett pushed his way to the front and waving his hat in the air proposed three cheers for Calkins, which the Squire men answered with three cheers for their chief. By this time Doolittle, who was behind, reached the landing, and calling to Bennett, said: "Grab the list and tear it."

Bennett reached over a reporter's shoulder to snatch the list from Meany but the latter turned to the right, and Doolittle was there to attack him. The two pressed Meany to the railing and struggled to throw him over to the floor below, a distance of about twelve feet. Colonel John C. Haines and Moritz Koch, of Seattle, Representative Ragsdale, Contractor Roberts and C. B. Dillingham, of Spokane Falls, then rushed to Meany's assistance. Haines locked with Doolittle and threw him aside, and Representative Ragsdale pulled Nelson Bennett's whiskers until he released his hold on Meany. Mr. Dillingham jabbed his elbow into Bennett's stomach. By this time hundreds of men were crowding towards the scene of the conflict, and it looked as if nothing could possibly prevent a riot. By an almost superhuman effort Colonel Haines freed Meany from his assailants, and the coast being clear, he fled up stairs to Senator Squire's headquarters. He was weak and tottering. His clothes were disarranged, perspiration was running from every pore, and when he reached the room he fell on a bed exhausted.

Senator VanDevanter, of King, and two newspaper men followed, and fearing a fresh attack from the mad crowd on the stairway, locked the door. Colonel Haines came in shortly after and was glad to find that the call for the caucus had been saved. It was crumpled but recognizable. Colonel Haines, Representative Meany and Senator VanDevanter essayed to go down the stairway, but there were indications that the crowd would renew the attack, so they entered the lobby by a back stairway. The excitement was still high. Senator Thompson, of Walla Walla, and an attorney were both on the landing trying to address the crowd, one in favor of Squire and the other for Calkins. There was such a roar that nobody could hear a word. The conduct of Bennett and Doolittle was condemned by everybody.

Senators Cooper, Easterday, Owing, Parkinson, Long and Kneeland, and Representatives Dysart, Frater, Garretson, Coughran, Tyler, Taylor, Miller, Gandy and Fraser.

All except Parkinson, Frater and Gandy are pronounced Calkins men. Parkinson, Frater and Gandy left because a motion postponing the caucus until tomorrow morning was not agreed upon. Senator Owings left after his motion to adjourn had been voted down. The discussion was full of bitterness. Senator Kneeland charged that the call for the caucus was secretly circulated by the Squire men, and was a violation of every principle that brings deliberative bodies together. Senator Dyer and Representatives Meany, De Steiguer, Lawton and Walker replied to the charges. They insisted that there was nothing unfair, and said that the opposition did not want a caucus and would not attend one tomorrow morning. At 10 o'clock, after two hours' wrangle, another motion to adjourn was voted down and Senator Dyer placed Senator Squire in nomination. No one else was named, and he was the unanimous choice of the caucus. There were forty-eight members present at the time.

Balloting in the Senate.
OLYMPIA, Jan. 20.—7 P. M.—In the Senate the vote stands: Squire 15, Calkins 14, Carroll 4, Laughton 1.

In the house Metcalfe of Stephens charges an attempt at bribery on the part of Calkins. An investigating committee has been appointed. Great sensation.

The house ballots at 8 o'clock to-night.

Vote in the House.

OLYMPIA, Jan. 20.—9 P. M.—The house voted at 8 P. M., Calkins 15, Squire 43, Carroll 17. If there is no change Squire will be elected by two votes on joint ballot.

Pandemonium in Congress.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—In the house when the reading of the journal was concluded this morning Mills objected to its approval and stated that he desired to debate the question. In a moment McKinley was on his feet with a demand for the previous question on approval of the journal and he was recognized by the speaker.

There followed a scene of great excitement, almost rivalling that of yesterday. Messrs. Bland, Rogers and Mills, were the excoriated speakers and the speaker in a calm manner stated that he administering the rules as he understood them, and as sustained by the house and that he would continue to administer them so long as he retained the position to which he was elected by the house.

Another wave of excitement has just passed over the house. The speaker, Mills, and McKinley were the principal agitators, the latter declaring with emphasis that if necessary the house would stay in session till noon of the fourth of March in order to pass the bill which would give every citizen of this land his right to a free ballot and fair count.

China Will Be Represented.

CHICAGO, Jan. 19.—All doubt as to China's action in regard to the fair has been dispelled. Charles Denby, United States minister to Peking, has announced officially to the World's Columbian Exposition officials that as a result of the many interviews with the emperor the Chinese government has decided to participate in the exposition. Promoter-General Handy has appointed Dr. Thos. Weston, of New York, as foreign exchange editor, with headquarters at Chicago. He has a wide experience in the class of work for which he is chosen.

Miles Gets a Move on at Last.

PINE RIDGE, Jan. 21.—This morning all of the troops with the exception of the First infantry broke camp and moved to the bank of Craven creek about four miles south of the agency. The redskins at last understand the move. Not a few of them look upon it with apprehension and have accordingly doubled their pickets.

THE CAUCUS.

Squire Receives an Unanimous Nomination.

The time for the caucus was now approaching and many, expecting that the fight would be renewed there, started
