Mr. C. R. Bone, of Hood River, is in the city. The thermometer has stood at 38 above nearly all day.

Eighteen carloads of cattle passed down to the Sound last night and twelve carloads today.

Members of the fire company are considering the question of trying to get a fire alarm system.

Extremely cold weather is reported at La Grande and our eastern neighbors will revel in ice next summer.

The Y's will meet at their hall Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Members are requested to be on hand promptly.

Miss Sadie Whitmer, who has been visiting her sister Mrs. George Filloon for a month or more, leaves tomorrow for Seattle.

Members of Company A are requested to be on hand promptly at 8 o'clock as the election of a second lieutenant will be in order.

Recorder Knaggs found employment for six tramps yesterday morning. They seem to be more numerous than usual, but all that stop here find a job.

If you want to get the latest news you must take the CHRONICLE. Its dispatches are twenty-four hours earlier than those of any paper that reaches The Dalles.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Harris take this means of expressing their gratitude to friends for their many kindnesses and tender sympathy in their recent sad bereavement.

Samples of fine shoes made by the Boston Shoe and Leather Co. at North Dalles are on exhibition in the CHRONICLE windows, and have attracted considerable attention.

If the Union Pacific management have any regard for decency they will put the steamer Baker on the Cascade route, and give the people on the Washington side of the river a chance to do their trading.

The remains of the late E. S. Haage, who was burned to death near Boyd last week, were buried here today, with appropriate services by the G. A. R. of which he was a member.

The chances for an ice pack this winter are growing beautifully less every day, and though the thermometer is below the freezing point today a chinook is passing a few thousand feet above us which will soon make its presence felt here.

It is early in the season for snake stories but they are already going the rounds. A dispatch the other day stated that a young man hunting in New York had been bitten by a rattlesnake, and the same paper stated that there was eight inches of snow on the ground.

The Portland Evening Telegram has been purchased by Captain George H. Moffett and others, and he occupies the position of editor and managing proprietor. The paper will be democratic, and that is about all we can say about it until we have the pleasure of seeing a sample copy.

Major and Mrs. Scott closed their lectures here last night. Both are well pleased with our people, more so than any place they have been in the state, and they are so well pleased with Oregon that they are going to make it their future home. We are glad to have such people come among us to live. Their meetings have been well attended and our people speak very highly of them. It is probable the Major and his estimable wife will stop at The Dalles again on their return to the Willamette valley from Spokane Falls trip.

BOSTON SHOE FACTORY.

Samples of the Work Turned out at North Dalles are on Exhibition. In the front window of the CHRONICLE office have been placed some excellent samples of the shoes turned out at the Boston Shoe and Leather Factory now in successful operation at North Dalles.

The samples are very handsome and consist of men's, boys' and youth's English grain and calf shoes, hand welt and Campbell welt, machine sewed and Standard screw patent made shoes. We have seen nowhere any better made or more durable goods than those on exhibition here, and the public generally are invited to come in and examine them, for they will bear the closest inspection. The goods are such that their representatives can present them with confidence and expect a fair share of orders from the merchants of the interior.

THE FACTORY. The Boston Shoe and Leather company's factory is now fully completed and equipped and is prepared to turn out work that will equal if not excel any goods ever brought to the Pacific coast. The factory is three stories high, and has a frontage of 100 feet with one wing of 75 feet and another of 50. The building is large enough for the manufacture of 150 cases of goods per day, and is one of the best equipped in the United States. Nothing is lacking to turn out the best of work. The first floor is devoted to cutting of the soles of the shoes, the second floor to the fitting of the soles and the third to finishing. The crowded space of our columns prevent an extended description at present. The superintendent of the factory is a Mr. Hall of Boston who has had years of experience in the leading factories in the east, and is a thoroughly competent manager. He has some twenty hands at work at present and will add to the force as fast as orders come in for work. The factory can work 500 hands to advantage and we predict that before a year has passed that number of men will be kept busy in the establishment. Only the best of leather is being used. The sole leather is being brought from California, the calf skins from Chicago and Boston, while the trimmings are brought from Philadelphia. It is confidently expected that a tannery will be located here before the season is over and the leather manufactured right at home thus keeping large amount of money here that is now sent away.

Travelers are to be put in the field at once and the factory will be run to fill orders as fast as sent in. Mr. Fraser takes a line of samples east tonight of the shoes. He will visit Pendleton, Baker City, La Grande and that section going from thence to Spokane Falls and the mining section. F. B. Robbins will start today on a trip for Southern Oregon and the Sound in the interest of the Boston Boot and Shoe factory of North Dalles. He carries a fine line of samples of the work to be turned out, and is prepared to fill orders promptly.

DIED. At his home near Kingsley, Tuesday February 3rd of pneumonia, Hugh M. Baxter, aged about 50 years.

Mr. Baxter was born in county Down, Ireland, but came to America thirty years ago. He has resided near Kingsley in this county for about twenty-five years. He was a large hearted genial man, a kind and good neighbor and a steadfast friend. He was suffering from a severe cold while attending the meeting of the Farmers' Mercantile Society here last week, and being a man of robust build and strong physique he did not take proper care of himself and a fatal attack of pneumonia was the result. The funeral, we understand, will not take place until next Saturday.

A BIT OF WALL PAPER.

SENTIMENTAL REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD GENTLEMAN.

He Was from Troy, but He Started Life in the Metropolis—Remembrances of His Early Married Life—Struggling for a Memento—The Hard Hearted Boss.

A middle aged man who was gazing absently out of a window of an elevated car the other day started suddenly and craned his neck to look at the wall of brick and brown stone front by which the train was passing. Two or three houses had been torn down to make room for improvements, and the hole was all that was left of them, save a litter of broken bricks in the cellar and an acre or so of wall paper in many designs upon the sides of the adjoining building. The middle aged man got out at the next station and walked back to the hole. He stood on the sidewalk a moment, looking first up into the air and then at the half dozen workmen who were removing the last traces of the wreck. Presently he appeared to pluck up resolution, for he gravely descended the rough plank gangway that led from the street to the bottom of the hole and approached the boss of the gang.

"Been tearing down these houses, I see," remarked the middle aged man by way of introduction. The boss stared.

"We ain't been puttin' up any," he responded. SEEKING A SOUVENIR. "That's what I meant," said the middle aged man imperturbably. "Would you mind lending me a ladder for a minute or two?"

"What in thunder do you want to do with it?" exclaimed the boss. "I want to climb up to that piece of paper," responded the middle aged man, pointing to a section of the wall that was covered with a greenery gallery design. "You see," he continued, "I used to live there."

There was a suspicion of moisture in the middle aged man's eyes and a faint smile on his lips as he said this, and he looked up at the soiled patch of paper as a traveler might view the receding lights of his native town. The boss was puzzled and suspicious, but after a moment of silence, while he pretended to be watching his men, he said:

"You can take that one in the corner if you'll move it yourself and put it back again."

The middle aged man bowed without a word, took off his overcoat and laid it gently upon a pile of bricks, laid down his cane, and proceeded, at the expense of no little exertion, to place the ladder. As he began to climb up the boss ran over and said threateningly:

"See here, now; no shenanigans! You'll only get a broken bone or two if you fall from that ladder."

The middle aged man laughed quietly. "Do not fear," he answered, "I'm not going to commit suicide. I'll be down all right in a few minutes."

Nevertheless the boss detailed two of his men to stand under the ladder to break the fall of the stranger should he try to tempt death from the ladder top.

THE STORY. The middle aged man climbed up, and when he was at the top he could just reach the lower edge of the greenery gallery wall paper. He looked at it earnestly, and then drew out a pocket knife and cut off a small section that contained the principal elements of the design. He put the scrap into his pocket, descended, lugged the ladder back to its proper position, put on his overcoat and stepped once more before the boss.

"I am much obliged to you," he said. "You see, when I was first married we went to housekeeping here. We had two unfurnished, unfinished rooms up two flights. We were desperately poor, wife and I; just enough to get on with, you know. The other people in the flat were also poor. They couldn't afford to paper their vacant rooms, and the landlord wouldn't spend a cent. So we papered them ourselves. We got the paper—best we could find of the cheap grades—and wife made a paste out of flour and water. We fixed up a brush out of a towel. Then with chairs and a table for a stepladder we papered our—our apartments. I saw the same old paper as I was riding by, and I thought a piece of it would be a nice souvenir."

The boss' heart was touched. "And the wife," he said hesitatingly. "is—er—"

"Oh, no!" exclaimed the middle aged man, smiling cheerfully. "She's alive and hearty, thank you. We live in Troy now, and we've got three strapping children. Circumstances are better now, if you please. Whenever I come to town I make it a point to look at our first home, and today I saw that it was only empty air. The wall paper was there, though, and I thought I'd get a piece to take home to my wife as a remembrance of our first housekeeping. I am very much obliged to you."

The middle aged man walked up the gangplank with quiet dignity, and the boss, still disturbed by the episode, remarked:

"What a queer chap it is, by thunder!"—New York Sun.

A Man's Opinion. It was a wise man who said on the subject of woman's dress: "I have found invariably that those women who really understand the art of dress, who know what to wear and when to wear it, have taste and intelligence of a more refined order than those who regard costumes in the light of mere clothes, and who not only reveal no appreciation of a woman's obligations to look her best at all times, but affect to treat dress altogether as a subject only for the attention of frivolous minds."

A Small Matter. Mrs. Forundrid—Horrors! Half a dozen words in your note to Mrs. Society are misspelled. Miss Forundrid—Oh, that don't matter. She can see by the coat of arms on our stationery that we're all right.—New York Weekly.
