At the board of trade meeting last evening it was resolved to invite the party who wishes to start a woolen mill here to visit the city and confer with the board of trade on the subject. The secretary was ordered to write to the portage commission asking for information as to when they will commence work on as to when they will commence work on the portage at the Cascades.

Everything seems to indicate that the price of wheat will be higher this year than last. Six weeks ago prices commenced to go up gradually and now wheat is from $1.55 to $1.60. San Francisco exporters are selling cargoes for more. The season's options are $1.55 until June and 1891 options are $1.65 until June and 1891 options are the best indications of prices which will prevail during and after the harvest, and the next crops will bring $1.50 or more, which is a better price than we have been getting of late years.—Oregon Express.

THE SUGAR BEET.

The following circular has been issued by the Oregon state board of commerce has been sent out by that body. The in regard to the sugar beet seed which is seed can be had on application to the being distributed throughout the country being distributed throughout the country under the auspices of that organiza-

> In the effort to have experiments made In the effort to have experiments made in various sections of the state, for the purpose of ascertaining definitely whether sugar beets can be produced in Oregon, of a quality and quantity, and at a cost to warrant the establishing of beet sugar manufactories, the following directions for planting and cultivation of the beet has been obtained from those who have had experience therein. Select a soil that will not become hard during the growing season. The sugar beet, if raised in proper soil, with proper cultivation, will grow all underground, except a very small crown. If the ground becomes hard so that the beet cannot expand underground, it will be forced above, and be worthless for sugar, as all that portion of the beet that projects above ground, contains no sugar, but impurities that prevent the crystali-

Plow the land not less than 12 inches deep, the first plowing, as early in the season as practicable. Plow very shallow the second time, not over four or five inches deep. Work the land well, after this last plowing, pulverize the surface thoroughly. Then if the rainy season is about over, let it remain from ten to twelve days, before sowing, in order to allow the moisture to rise to the surface. If the seed is sown on freshly prepared If the seed is sown on freshly prepared ground, it will germinate immediately, and the weather should be warm and dry, the moisture will recede from the surface, the germs will die, and the seed

The ground must be thoroughly pul-verized on top, and the seed planted in drills fifteen inches apart, not over onestand from three to five inches apart in the rows. The thinning and first weeding should be done as soon as the young beets can be distinguished from the weeds. After this, all that is necessary is to keen them free from weeds.

weeds. After this, all that is necessary is to keep them free from weeds.

A light, sandy loam, or alluvial soil is best. However, the best land in the world cultivated as is usually done in raising beets for stock would be worthless for beet to manufacture into sugar. less for beet to manufacture into sugar. And unless the farmer follows instructions in raising beets for this purpose, it will be no test. Beets grown side by side on the same land, one lot grown as directed for sugar, might show by analysis from 14 per cent. to 20 per cent. sugar, while the other lots, cultivated as is generally done for stock, and long distances apart, would grow large, mainly above ground, and contain very little sacharine and be unfit for sugar. The farmer will obtain fully as large a crop sacharine and be unfit for sugar. The farmer will obtain fully as large a crop if cultivated for sugar, as he would for stock in the usual way. The beets would be smaller but there would be more of them. A beet for sugar might weigh from one-half to three pounds, and grown all under the ground except a small crown. It is therefore essential in order that the test may be of value for the end desired that the instructions be followed strictly.

When the beets are grown, in selecting samples for analysis take only those that have grown all underground, of good shape, and do not weigh over two pounds. An analysis of beets raised in the ordinary way will give no test of value.

Your attention is called to the follow-

Your attention is called to the following extracts from the report of the commissioner of agriculture, Washington, D. C., for the year 1881, on the sugar beet, and quoted from the most reliable European authorities:

"Experiments in close planting, continued for a series of eight years, gave the following results: 1st, richer; 2d, better quality; 3d, of larger vield in weight; 4th, less exhausting to the soil." Also—

Beets at smaller distances will pro duce more sugar and absorb less of saline matters. Now, we know that the constituent properties of sugar are furnished entirely by the atmosphere, and that the saline matters are furnished by the soil, and by cultivating the sugar beets at smaller distances from each other (that is, closely planted) they are less exhausting to the soil. Close culture is more profitable at the same time to the grower and the manufacturer.
