THE SHAM BATTLE.

A Merchant Desires to Know Why it Never Came Off.

THE DALLES, Or., July 6, 1891.

EDITOR CHRONICLE: The citizens of The Dalles have again incurred the odium of the people from the surrounding country. The citizens welcomed here to witness the celebration of the 4th went away disgusted because they did not see the promised "sham battle" which was to be the drawing card of the day. For this reason the country people and visitors unite in one voice condemning our people and the committee of arrangements for this omission from the published order of exercises. I myself at my place of business have heard farmers who are my best customers say that they thought they were imposed upon and lured into The Dalles by the false promises of the 4th of July committee. Some of the same people came into the city for no other purpose than to view the sham battle and they wish to know why the battle did not take place as advertised on every barn door and fence in Eastern Oregon.

Now I think, as far as I know, that it is wrong to censure the merchants of our city for the failure of the battle to take place, because they subscribed liberally for the celebration. The blame should be placed where it belongs, not on the people of The Dalles but either on the committee of arrangements or on the officers of the 3d regiment. These parties should make some explanation to the visitors.

I have another grievance. Why did not the procession go through the streets mentioned on the programme? Whose fault is this? I spent a few hours decorating my business house on Second street but the procession did not come near me and avoided one of the best business blocks in the city.

As a tax payer and subscriber to the celebration fund I would like to know why our wishes were not carried out. An explanation should be given either by the committee or by the officers of the militia.

Macaulay as a Speaker.

Men listened to Macaulay with respect, weighed his arguments, reflected on what he had said, were often convinced, sometimes converted, but nowhere did crowds of eager listeners and ardent admirers bend beneath the music of his voice or the lightning glance of his eye. An old friend of mine, recently dead, who had often heard him and remembered him perfectly, assured me, however, that he was a great power fifty years ago, and he believed that his oratorical triumphs hardly received full credit in those days.

Macaulay himself said that one of his chief defects as a public speaker was his extraordinary rapidity of utterance, which spoiled the effect of his words. His speeches resembled carefully prepared essays, delivered with incredible rapidity and some want of impressiveness, rather than the spontaneous outburst of the orator's full heart. Fluency and great facility in finding the right words are not an unmixed gain to the speaker. Appropriate pauses and emphasis are even more important, otherwise a torrent of words lacks impressiveness.

Then the management of the voice counts for very much. A speech that flows on like a rope unbound from a cylinder is not a good one. Again, to be successful a speech must be enlivened with anecdotes or humor. People can always read for solid instruction, but a platform speaker must amuse and please rather than teach.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Smart Young Fellow.

"There are pretty smart people traveling nowadays," remarked a Hibernian driver of a Fourth avenue car a few days ago, "and we carmen now and then meet some of them. A young fellow with cuffs on his shoes boarded my car at Twenty-third street. He carried a grip, and I put him down as a matter-of-fact business man. He was in a hurry, and says he: 'Lay your whip on those horses; I'm going to Hartford, and want to get to the Grand Central station in five minutes.' He spoke in such a commanding way that I asked him who he was. 'I'm the first vice president of this road, old man,' says he, 'and I want you to obey my order.' Without further ceremony I got my horses into a lively trot, and people on the avenue must have thought that the car had an electric motor as well as the horses.

"In the space of a few minutes I was at the station, and I hoped my passenger would put a quarter in my hand for my obedience. Well, sir, that young man jumped from the platform, and after he did so he turned around, made an offensive gesture with his hand, and said: 'Old man, you can now drive to the devil.' I was greatly annoyed at the trick, and would have punished him for his impudence but for his outstancing me. I think he was an actor who was late for his train.—New York Times.

Glimpses Backward.

Through that long dark stretch of a thousand years lying between the Fifth and Fifteenth centuries the greatest luxuries were books. So costly were they that it was next to impossible for any but the richest to procure such expensive treasures, the more's the pity, since but inches of information, so to speak, remain to tell the story of their worth and the tale of wonderful garbure, both binding and ornamentation revealing the peculiarly rich and varied handicraft then in vogue.

Much of the transcribing of the period was done by residents of religious houses: boards of hard wood, over which leather was stretched, inclosed these precious treasures, and further protection by metallic corner pieces and massive clasps preserved the leaves from injury.

Literary treasures intended for royal households and ecclesiastical dignitaries, and copies for churches and monasteries had side casings of ivory on which appropriate subjects were carved in silver, of quaint fretwork pattern, and otherwise distinctively honored by the addition of gold plaques, studded with gems and jewels. Both sets and single volumes were carefully incased in boxes no less expensive than were the brilliant bindings.—Harper's Bazar.

Send Him to a Museum.

Valley City has a curiosity in horse-flesh that is simply astonishing. H. J. Hamlin, one of our horse dealers, shipped in from Montana a car of horses, or broncos, as they are better known. In this lot was one that he could not sell, owing to the fact that he had none to mate him. He is a sorrel, stands fully 19 hands, or 6 ft. 4 in., from floor to withers; his legs are 3 ft. 6 in. before touching the body, and a small bronco can easily walk under him. A man 6 feet in height can't see over his back, even when standing on tiptoe. In length he is fully thirteen feet, or seventeen feet from tip of nose to tip of tail. When standing with his head as ordinarily checked up a six foot man by standing on tiptoe can just touch the base of the ear. "Hamlin's Elephant" is the cognomen he is known by.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Similarity of Quail and Barnyard Fowl. The quail is in some respects the most interesting of the gallinaceous family, as all rooster and hen birds are called. The young are very much like the grouse chicks, except in size, and indeed the adult quail is only about as large as the average 3-week-old chick of the barnyard. Their seeming trustfulness in man and their inclination at times to mingle with their big cousins near farm-houses, make them universal favorites.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Dimo Safer and Street Car Fares. Brother Tom—For heaven's sake, Lil lend me a dime.

Sister Lil—I was just going to ask you for two dimes. Where's your money?

Brother Tom—in that infernal patent safe, and it won't open until I've put in another ten cent piece.

Sister Lil—Same here. Mine won't deliver for less than two dimes.

Both get out and walk.—Pittsburg Bulletin.
