EVERY MAN A MONOPOLIST.

Human nature is pretty much the same in the beggar as it is in the prince. The same greed for wealth that distinguishes the rich monopolist is easily traced in the character of his poorer neighbor. Every man is a monopolist to the full extent of his power, and the exceptions to this rule are rare indeed. The vender of pea-nuts is as anxious, in his humble way, to control and monopolize the entire trade within his jurisdiction as is the rich speculator in puts and calls, to corner the market of a continent. The corner grocery-man, as well as the merchant prince, the boot-black as well as the bloated bond-holder, the butcher, the baker and candle-stick maker, all are alike infected with the disposition to monopolize the business of their respective callings. It may be all wrong, and in a strictly ethical sense it surely is, but human nature itself must be changed before the disposition can be eradicated. In the poor man the tendency is called smartness, shrewdness, business capacity, in the rich it is designated by the harsher terms of monopoly and oppression, yet who shall draw the line where business capacity ends and monopoly begins. Right here lies the difficulty the law experiences in dealing with monopolies. If it is wrong for the grain speculator to corner the market of a nation, it is wrong for the butcher to corner the market of a village. The disposition, the moral intent is the same in both, the crime against society, if crime it is, is only one of degree. The sin of the rich man is greater only because his opportunities are greater and our sympathy for the smaller monopolist, in his struggle for control of the business of his limited sphere, while we roundly condemn his richer brother, is largely placed at the expense of our consistency. We may sympathize with a combination of 6,000,000 farmers who form a scheme to enhance the price of wheat to $1.35 a bushel and reap a million dollars extra harvest from the great army of consumers, but it is impossible to justify their action while we roundly condemn the stock gambler, who attempts, in his own way, to effect the same end to his own personal advantage. After all the principles of Christianity, embraced in the heart and carried out in the life, seem alone capable of meeting the difficulty and of causing the rich not to oppress the poor but to do unto others as they wish others should do unto them.

One of the many attractions of the Hood River country is Cloud Cap Inn, an old fashioned caravansary on the slope of Mount Hood, at an elevation of 7,000 feet, and only fifteen minute's walk from the perpetual ice and snow of Eliot Glacier, from which grand store house the Inn draws its supply of ice. The Inn is a substantial log building in the form of a crescent, built of silver fir logs, hewn on three sides and closely jointed. The interior is coiled on all sides with four inch dressed and matched lumber. The center of the building is a large day room with a huge fire-place, built of un-hewn rock, the whole reminding one of the lordly hall of some ancient feudal chieftain. The wings on either side of the hall are partitioned off into apartments for guests, office, kitchen, store-room and refectory. The building is rooted securely, by immense hog-chains to the mountain precipice on which it stands. The finest mountain road in the country leads to it and from the top of the building can be seen a panoramic view of which Bierstadt, whose famous painting of Mount Hood sold for $20,000, says: "There is nothing in Europe to compare with it." We predict that in the future the charming valley of Hood River will be better known to the outside world through its connection with the scenic glories surrounding Cloud Cap Inn than by anything else.

The Louisiana Lottery Company offers to the farmers of that state that if they will agree to extend the company's charter, the latter will loan them money at one per cent. per annum. The offer is of course very tempting to impecunious farmers, or to any one else, for that matter, but the proposition is practically the same as if the company should say to the Louisiana legislature: If you pass an act, making it lawful for us to steal, we promise to loan you the fruit of our theft at one per cent. a year.

The Chronicle is 50 cents per month.

The farmers' alliance which met at Portland the other day made a very grave mistake when it pledged itself to a platform that proposes to make its $50 per capita or $3,250,000,000 of irredeemable paper money a legal tender for all debts public and private, "all previous contracts to the contrary notwithstanding." There are thousands of persons still living who remember with indignation instances that occurred, after our currency had depreciated, during the civil war, when men who had contracted debts on a gold basis took advantage of the legal tender clause to pay a hundred cent debt with a forty cent greenback. Of course farmers' alliance men will say they don't expect their currency to depreciate, but the bare possibility of such a thing should have made them hesitate to place themselves on record as favoring anything so suspiciously dishonest. Such a plank, if we mistake not, will lose the alliance many a vote in Oregon and elsewhere. It is never right to amend a wrong by a wrong. The poor have no more right to oppress the rich (if that were possible) than the rich have to oppress the poor.

If it can be demonstrated that the sugar beet can be grown successfully in Eastern Oregon, and we know no reason why it should not, it is possible to add another element to our industrial prosperity. It has been demonstrated in the factories at Alverado, California, and at Grand Island, Nebraska, that sugar can be made in this country much cheaper than it can be made abroad. With the great impetus to business the two-cent bounty gives the industry it can be made to become one of the leading ones of the United States. At the factories in Utah one half the amount of the sugar consumed in the territory will be produced. A late telegram informs us that this fall at Marshalltown, Iowa, another large factory will be started and simultaneously six more institutions will be put in operation in Nebraska, Kansas and Western Iowa.

The cheekiest thing that happened for many a day occurred when a New York "boodler" alderman who was for nine months a fugitive in Canada, fearing to return to New York lest he should be sent to the penitentiary, made application for his nine months' salary.

We always keep a bottle of it in the house." For sale by Snipes & Kinersly.
