The Chronicle is the Only Paper in The Dalles that Receives the Associated Press Dispatches.

Owing to the pressure of Mr. Gourley's private business he has resigned his position as editor of the CHRONICLE. He is a writer of more than average ability, and has been of great service during the past three months to the paper. The CHRONICLE wishes him success in whatever field of usefulness he may see fit to go into.

The Salem Journal is reading is reading the riot act because the county court of Marion county has refused to award the publication of the county commissioners' proceedings to the newspaper having the largest circulation. The Journal plainly intimates that the court has matters which it wishes kept secret or the printing would be awarded. We are glad to say that Wasco county has a wise and enlightened official in Judge Thornbury, who held that the new law went into effect on July 1st, and he with the consent of the commissioners, awarded the printing until the first of January. There may possibly be some question as to the legality of so doing, but there is no question but what the people should have complete knowledge of the action of its board, and the only way to make that known is by publication of proceedings in some paper of general circulation, and the CHRONICLE thinks the end justifies the means. The court is to be commended for its action.

An exchange that a few days ago recommended the legislature of Louisiana to grant a charter to the infamous lottery company on condition that the company loan the money it gets from suckers, to the farmers of the state, is out in its last issue with a learned homiletic on the wickedness of physical uncleanness and the best method of exterminating bed bugs, and then winds up a long paragraph with the following pronouncement: "To kill the bed bugs and mosquitoes is a crime only ignorance would perpetrate!"

An attractive young married woman from Texas recently arrived in New York and inadvertently started out on the street without an escort. She was soon accosted by one of the gilded youth who haunt the thoroughfares in Gotham. She did not articulate, but responded by lifting a silver-handled umbrella and bringing it down on the occupant of the impertinent young man with a sounding thwack. Females from the Lone Star state evidently know how to dispose of the masher nuisance with neatness and dispatch.

Mr. A. Lytle, in coming from The Dalles, happened to be coming down the Deschutes grade at the time of the recent water-spout at that place. He says it was appalling. The water came down in torrents and large rocks rolled down into the road from the sides of the canyon, while the water fell so rapidly that it filled his wagon bed, damaging his freight to some extent. Mr. Lytle says he would not like to again pass through such an experience.—Ochoco Review.

Allen C. Mason, of Tacoma, has received his 4,000-year-old mummy from Egypt. It is now time for the Seattle papers to say something about the eternal fitness of things which sent the mummy to a nice, quiet, soothing place like Tacoma.

The Lake County Examiner's Fourth of July edition comes out in glowing colors, the outside being printed in red and the inside in blue. It presents a neat and tasty appearance.

The small fry politicians are having a good deal to say about who is to receive the presidential nomination next year; but the big fellows, those who really control things, are keeping silent in seven languages on the subject.

A lot of railroad spikes, which have been lying in a vacant lot near the depot at Centralia since last summer, and which belonged to G. W. Hunt, are to be sold by the sheriff to satisfy a judgment of $643. The spikes are said to be worth anywhere from $20,000 to $40,000.

The Spokane Review says that if Emperor William should visit the United States he would find enough of his countrymen here to make the surroundings seem homelike.

Chicago wants the national conventions next year. St. Louis is also putting in a bid for them; and San Francisco thinks she ought to have them.

Down went — No, not McGinty but the price of dress goods at A. M. Williams and Co.'s.

BONDED INDEBTEDNES.

The custom followed by many of the counties of the neighboring state of Washington in bonding their indebtedness, has its merits, says the Jacksonville Times. It relieves the present generation from bearing alone the burden of developing the country, and makes posterity, or its equivalent, pay a certain proportion of the cost of the many benefits they derive from the labors of the pioneers. It has the effect of making current county warrants pass at their face value instead of at a ruinously heavy discount to which they are often subjected under the system followed in this state, and the county derives a direct benefit from the fact for all services rendered it gets the benefit of actual cash rates and cash competition.

Prineville News.

Roe Holges and his son Lou are gathering horses to drive to California to place upon the market.

B. F. Allen returned from The Dalles last week. Owing to the small demand, for wood and poor prices Mr. Allen did not sell.

Governor Penney being on the speaker's stand at The Dalles celebration was called for and in a short address he alluded to states rights and free trade, which was thought by some to be a little out of place.

The Wild West band exploded the theory of those who assert that the civilization of the Indian is an impossibility. The music they gave at this place on the Fourth was very good, the leader especially seeming to handle his instrument with understanding and ease.

As a sample of the size of the hay crops that are being harvested this season, we may say that a few days ago we saw alfalfa being cut that was so heavy that that which was cut had to be raked away from that left standing before the mowing machine could get to the standing grass.

Prineville was courteous to its guests in surrendering laurels to the contestants in the different sports on the Fourth. The outside competitors were successful in everything, baseball, trotting, and even when it was conceded by all that the Wild West band produced the sweetest music that was furnished on that day.

On last Sunday Fred Earl was arrested by Marshal Black on the charge of larceny from the person of another, and on Monday was given a hearing before Justice Bell, who after hearing the testimony held him in the sum of $300 to await the action of the grand jury. Bonds were not furnished, and in consequence our jail has an occupant.

Rules Governing Use of Water.

Sec. 12.—The use of water for irrigation is prohibited except between the hours of 5 and 9 a. m. and 5 and 9 p. m.

Sec. 25.—On failure to comply with the rules and regulations established as a condition to the use of water or pay the water rents in the time and manner heretofore provided, the water may be shut off until payment is made of the amount due with fifty cents in addition for the expense of turning the water off and on.

The following statement from Mr. W. B. Denny, a well known citizen of New Lexington, Ohio, will be of interest to persons troubled with Rheumatism. He says: "I have used Chamberlain's Pain Balm for nearly two years, four bottles in all, and there is nothing I have ever used that gave me as much relief for rheumatism. We always keep a bottle of it in the house." For sale by Snipes & Kinnersly.

For sale, due east of the fair grounds, eight and a half lots, containing a good dwelling-house, barn, and other buildings. The grounds are all set out in choice-bearing fruit trees, grapes and berries. Will be sold at a bargain if bought within the next two weeks, as I desire to leave the city.

WALLPAPERS.

Valuable Points About the Interior Decoration of Your House.

There is no excuse at present for the use of a gaudy, ugly wallpaper. Excellent, tasteful designs can be found at a low price. Do not attempt a niggard economy in this matter. Few rooms require more than ten rolls of paper, many much less, and there is often only the difference of five or ten cents on a roll in the price of a pretty or a cheap, ugly pattern. A beautiful paper for ordinary use can be purchased at twenty-five cents a roll, and if properly cared for will last many years. The laborer who hangs it should not charge over ten or twelve cents a roll. It is the fancy of the hour to use a wide border or frieze, varying from eighteen inches to twenty-two in width, usually wide enough to cover the space from the tops of the doors and window to the ceiling. This frieze is usually separated from the main body of the paper by a narrow picture molding.

This molding costs about eight or ten cents a foot, put up. The paperhanger can do it, and it is much better to let him, as the carpenter, though he may do it as well, may not be so careful not to injure the new paper in the process. An amateur could probably learn easily to put up this molding. It is put up with brads, but care must be taken not to nick or scratch it in putting it up, as it is already finished in gilt or natural wood stain. When purchased already finished the picture molding costs much less than when the carpenter makes it, and finishes it on the wall, as is sometimes done.

A picture molding properly put up will last as long as the house. In parlors, where delicate pictures in black and white or water colors will be hung, a white and gold paper is desirable, but in a simpler parlor a cartridge paper will probably give more satisfaction. Choose one in a brownish terra cotta, robin's egg blue or silvery olive gray, and have the frieze above it of a lighter tint, stenciled off with a pattern in black or gold or silver, and separated by a gilt, or in some cases an ebony picture molding. There must be an abundance of pictures hung on this plain background or it will be monotonous. Remember that it is an artistic rule that the base of a room should be darkest.

Where there is a dado used, it is allowable to use a heavy dark color; never a pronounced color, as such shades are utterly out of place on the wall. The middle space of the wall should be a medium shade, the frieze should be several tints lighter and the ceiling should be still lighter. Where two colors are used, one for the main wall and another for the frieze, the colder color should be used above. Thus, in a bedroom papered with palest rose and blue, the blue should be used for the frieze and the warm color below; and the two may be separated by an ebony or ivory and gold picture molding.

The dado and frieze are not often used together now, except in houses where it is desirable to "bring down" the ceiling and make the walls appear lower. They are more often seen in halls or dining rooms than anywhere else. It is quite easy to get friezes for any shade of cartridge paper printed in stenciled patterns. The hand painted stencil work would of course be expensive if a professional worker was engaged to do it.

As a rule, it is better to choose the upholstery of a room in contrasting rather than in similar colors, so as to avoid a monotonous effect in color. In a drawing room more delicacy of color is allowable than in other rooms, and bright colors are introduced in bric-a-brac ornaments, in wall curtains and in other decorative ways.—New York Tribune.

A Forsaken Dog and a Pair of Cuffs.

"You needn't tell me," remarked Lewis A. Rice, son of the late John A. Rice, "that dogs can't reason. There's my bull terrier Jack. I'll bet a hat he knows as much as anybody, and I'll tell you a story to prove it. A year or two ago I went away from home, leaving Jack behind with the family. The first day after I left he was disconsolate, and wandered up and down the house apparently unhappy. He wouldn't eat anything either. Next day it was just as bad. The third day he got into my room and found there a pair of cuffs, which had been forgotten. These he carried off and secreted, and then came back and ate a square meal. When he had satisfied his hunger he got the cuffs, put his paws on them and went contentedly to sleep.

"For weeks he carried those cuffs with him wherever he went, and nobody could get them away from him. At last somebody did steal them, and Jack refused to eat and moped around disconsolately. Then he found them again and was happy. Now, I say that shows that Jack has the faculty of reason. He knew those cuffs belonged to me, and as his affection for me was great they comforted him a little in his sorrow at my absence."—Chicago Post.

New Plays Require Capital.

A theatrical manager has a big contract on his hands in this age when he starts out to produce a new play. The expenses are enormous. "Salaries," said one of them, "are in individual cases higher than ever before. The companies are larger and the scenery is simply terribly costly. We put on scenery now which would have made managers stand aghast in the old days. Transportation runs up another big account and there are a thousand and one necessary items to swell the total. If a play is a failure it does not take long to sink a fortune in it. It makes a manager turn pale to go into his theater and find rows of vacant seats grinning at him. He knows that means 'stop!' for he can't afford to wait very long for the tide to turn."—New York Tribune.

Much Worse Off.
