A CHAPTER ON HUMAN NATURE.

An experience of over forty years has convinced us that after all human nature is a queer thing. Each one sees in each other the special vices or weaknesses which is in himself. Thus if a man is a natural provocator, he accuses every other person with whom he comes in contact with being a liar; if he is at heart a thief he thinks every other man a robber. So well is this truth recognized that it has grown into a proverb that you must "set a thief to catch a thief." You can tell in what a man's weakness consists when he gets mad or is engaged in heated debate. A coward always accuses his opponent of being cowardly, and if the accuser is a hypocrite he accuses every other person with hypocrisy; if he lacks charity no one else possesses that virtue. How many times have we all seen men strongly under the influence of liquor accuse every sober man they meet with being drunk. How well the Bible understood human nature when it said, "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh." A heart filled with love toward all mankind sees beaming from every face he meets the love and good fellowship he feels toward all people. If a man is looking only for kindness from the world, as the reflex of his own heart, he generally gets it, for he is not looking for slights or coldness, and people seeing the love shining out of his own face give love in return. After all is said and done people most generally in this world get what they are looking for.

Governor Pattison in vetoing the bill on compulsory education, passed by the Pennsylvania legislature, takes the ground that the state has no right to force an attendance at school where it may interfere with paternal and individual rights. The advantages of the free school system are beyond question but compulsion in educational matters is not likely to be productive of the best results. Freedom of action in education when all possible inducements are presented will lead to greater advancement than a law compelling merely its outward observance. The law cannot make a child learn any more than a man can make a horse drink when it is not dry. Create a thirst for knowledge in the child and it will then take advantage of the opportunities the law provides. The driving method of teaching has long since been abandoned by the leading educators.

Secretary Rusk's "What are your politics?" plan of conducting the signal service is exciting the attention of the volunteer observers, who, while the bureau was on a scientific basis, have done it invaluable service. They do the work for the sake of science and are paid nothing. One of them writes a St. Louis paper that this valuable service will be demoralized by the Spoils policy, but that we do not believe. Scientific observers work disinterestedly in the matter and we do not think the hue and cry about politics will disturb them. If Blaine is nominated for president the observers may have to record a cyclone but that will be all.

It was some weeks ago reported by a not always accurate press that ex-President Hayes was going to pieces; that his memory had failed him and he was intellectually a wreck. The lie is given to such statement in despatches which say the distinguished Ohioan and ex-president addressed 25,000 people at Beatrice, Neb., on the 4th. His theme was the growth and achievements of the American republic, its armies and its future glorious destiny. He spoke over two hours, closing with a grand peroration on the character and enduring fame of Lincoln.

It should be the work of a genuine and noble patriotism to raise the life of the nation to the level of its best privileges; to harmonize its general practice with its abstract principles; to elevate instruction into wisdom; to render that knowledge and wisdom complete in righteousness, and to make the love of country complete in the love of man.

Fred Douglas has come home from Hayti as an apologist for Hipolyte, who, he admits, has killed a large number of negroes; but, he adds, stringent measures were necessary to restore order. The view that a necessary way of restoring a negro to order is to shoot him and leave him lying in the street is somewhat singular in Frederick and unjustifiable in anyone.

Mosier Jottings.

Mosier, July 13.
EDITOR CHRONICLE.—We have had some pleasant showers which have done much good.

The Fourth has passed with all its joys and happy anticipations.

We hear of grand dinners partaken of in Mosier, one at the residence of Mr. Sellix. The repast was partaken of by eighteen persons and was pronounced superb. A gentleman said it was by far the best, with the greatest variety, that he had ever sat down to in Oregon. A picnic was also had in this vicinity which seems to have been very luscious, for even the tables groaned beneath the beautiful fruit, the pies and cake, and everything else that was good, but Oh, dear me, the poor.

M. C. was in The Dalles partaking largely of sand and dirt, being blown hither and thither. But it is the Fourth and we must not complain. All this hurricane of dust did not prevent our hearing and enjoying the beautiful music of the band to which much thanks is due.

Mr. Easterbrook has left here for his old home in Rhode Island, where he will probably spend the remainder of his days. He takes with him the best wishes of his friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Sherman, of Mitchell, made a flying trip to Mosier, calling on Mr. and Mrs. Root.

Our much respected friend, Mrs. Mosier, is quite out of health and has been for some time. We hope she will recover soon.

An alliance orator told the farmers at Sedgwick, Kan., that "there was no more reason why they should be republicans because their fathers were republicans than the should be bachelors because their fathers were bachelors."

O. KINERSLEY,
City Treasurer.

The following statement from Mr. W. B. Denny, a well known dairyman from New Lexington, Ohio, will be of interest to persons troubled with Rheumatism. We always keep a bottle of it in the house." For sale by Snipes & Kinersley.

For sale, due east of the fair grounds, eight and a half lots, containing a good dwelling-house, barn, and other buildings. The grounds are all set out in choice-bearing fruit trees, grapes and berries. Will be sold at a bargain if bought within the next two weeks, as I desire to leave the city.

The Whip Dance.

Indians frequently, after engaging in the whip dance, vow that they will never more submit to the ordeal, and mutually assure each other that their skins have been made to suffer for the last time. But an irresistible longing soon seizes them to again realize the fearful joy of indulging in the "sport," and the result is that the dance continues as fashionable as ever. The young men of the tribe then, having put on all the finery they are able to muster, arm themselves with the terrible maugarri—a peculiar whip from which the dance derives its name. This whip is about five feet in length and is manufactured of a long grass fiber native to the district, bound around spirally with a strip of thin cane. In the hands of a muscular Warau it is capable of inflicting a wound very little less severe than that which would be produced by the downward blow of a knife.

When the dance is about to commence the performers range themselves opposite one another, waving their whips in the air and giving utterance to cries resembling the notes of birds. Suddenly one of them stops, and poising himself on one leg stretches out the other, remaining perfectly motionless. The other stops, too, measures the distance carefully with his eye, springs high in the air to give force to the blow, and, wish! down comes the heavy whip with a fearful smack upon his opponent's outstretched limb, and a red gash marks where the keen thong has curled round his calf or ankle.

The recipient of the blow utters never a sound, but, smiling as cheerfully as possible under the circumstances, again takes up the dance until it is the turn of the other player to stand still and receive his punishment, which, we may depend upon it, is usually returned with as good a will as it was given.—San Francisco Examiner.

Some Rare Old Instruments.

Mr. Steinert, of this city, has added to his rare collection of musical instruments a viola de Gamba, which is probably the only one in playable condition in this country. It is in excellent preservation, and its present owner thinks that none can be found in Europe in such fine condition.

The first instrument has a straight back and the top is of a conical shape similar to the bass viol of the present day, and not rounded as the violoncello. The scroll is an artistic piece of carving made to represent the griffin of ancient mythology and is of brazed wood. Ivory squares are set in the finger board instead of raised brass frets, and accurately designate the fingering places. It is keyed for five strings, while all bow instruments of the present age have but four.

This valuable treasure of Mr. Steinert was found in a monastery in Berlin, in connection with a viola d'Amore, by a German citizen. He brought it to this country about thirty years ago and kept it until purchased by Mr. Steinert. Although there was nothing about it to show the date of its make, its construction indicates that it was made some time during the Fifteenth century.—New Haven Union.

What Keeps the Bicyclist Upright?

Let us suppose a cyclist mounted on his wheel and riding, say, toward the north. He finds himself beginning to tilt toward his right. He is now going not only north with the machine, but east also. He turns the wheel eastward. The point of support must of necessity travel in the plane of the wheel. Hence it at once begins to go eastward, and as it moves much faster than the rider tilts it quickly gets under him, and the machine is again upright. To one standing at a distance in front or rear the bottom of the wheel will be seen to move to the right and left.

I conclude, then, that the stability of the bicycle is due to turning the wheel to the right or left, whichever way the leaning is, and thus keeping the point of support under the rider. Just as a boy keeps upright on his finger a broomstick standing on its smallest end.—Charles B. Warring in Popular Science Monthly.

Begged John's Pardon.

At the Old Bailey it was customary to sentence the whole of the prisoners found guilty at the sessions at one time. It fell to Baron Graham's lot to perform this duty, and he accordingly went over the list with due solemnity, but omitted one person brought up for sentence—Mr. John Jones. The judge was on the point of finishing the sentences, when the officer reminded his lordship of this omission. Whereupon the judge said gravely, "Oh! I am sure I beg John Jones' pardon," and then sentenced him to transportation for life.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Slang and Similes.

Will some one kindly point out where metaphor and simile leave off and where slang begins? There are many expressions about which sometimes cause cultured people to turn up their noses or raise their eyebrows, and yet they are to be found in the Bible, in Shakespeare and in other excellent places, while there are about as many expressions which people use with a great deal of reverence, thinking that they come from the Bible, which really are to be found only in such works as Sterne's "Sentimental Journey through Italy."—New York Centinel.

Essenceful.

Cholly—What's aw—the mattah aw—with Sissy Downy? He—aw—looks vewy much dejected, y' know.
Gussie—Ya-as; Sissy, don't y' know, applied for membership in Sorosis, deal boy, but they actually wouldn't have him, y' know. Said he was too effeminate, bai Jovel—Judge.

A Pleasant Surprise.

Detective—Is this Mr. Hardup?
Hardup (uneasily)—Yes, but I'm very busy and can't talk to you. Call again.
Detective—I have a warrant for your arrest.
Hardup (relieved)—Oh! I thought you had a bill.—Munsey's Weekly.
