The State Problem. (Continued from Apr. 27th.)

If George Henry Young feels that a serious problem exists, it is because he finds himself in the midst of a struggle for the control of Oregon, which an American Federal parliament is endeavoring to dictate.

Young has openly declared that the future of Oregon is sure to be determined by the way in which the citizens of the State will vote on the tax question, which is to be voted on by the people of the State in November. The question is whether the people of the State will vote for a tax to be levied on the property of the State, or whether they will vote for a tax to be levied on the property of the citizens of the State. This question is of the utmost importance to the future of Oregon.

Moreover, it is significant that the question is to be voted on by the people of the State, and not by the federal government. This is because the federal government has no right to tax the property of the citizens of the State, and therefore, the federal government has no right to dictate the future of Oregon.

The people of Oregon are faced with a serious problem, and they must decide whether they will vote for a tax to be levied on the property of the State, or whether they will vote for a tax to be levied on the property of the citizens of the State. The future of Oregon is sure to be determined by the way in which the citizens of the State will vote on this question.
