Engineer Geo. B. We read the paragraph carefully when it was handed us and have read it over carefully since, and we are of the opinion that it required considerable lack of the charity that thinketh no evil to see in it any evil intention towards Mr. Leach or his conductor. Neither the author of the paragraph nor the present writer knew who the engineer was nor do either of us know who the conductor is, to this moment. If Mr. Leach supposes that the CHRONICLE would stoop to attempt an injury to any of the employes of the U. P. company he is simply mistaken, that is all.
