INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF A WATER MELON.

Yesterday morning Marshal Gibons presented himself with a big, luscious watermelon, from the wagon of a farmer, as the latter was in a store trying to sell his wares. For some reason Ralph was horse belonging to Ben Young attempted in a hurry to get rid of it so he passed to jump out of a lot and ran a picket six ing the recorder's office by the side door he deposited the melon in a corner for the animal to live. he deposited the melon in a corner. The recorder was absent and the door of like, as he walked down the street and turned the corner. At this moment C. ing. A sow has brought a litter of eleven female pigs, no males. This is a L. Phillips entered the engineer's office hog raising, as generally the sex is and enquired for the recorder. He evenly divided. wasn't in. Then Charley peeped through the side door and seeing the melon, he picked it up and walked off with it. A short time only elapsed and hunting up Marshal Gibons, I. J. Norman, Jack Staniels, S. E. Farris and the recorder, he invited them over to his soda water factory for a drink. were delighted to find a fine water melon | prizes drawn. cut up and ready for use. Charley told treated them to ginger pop and sarsapar-illa, while they thought he was the best fellow in the world but Ralph never fellow in the world, but Ralph never knew he had eaten part of his own water er's office and tried to find it.

THE TRUE CAUSE OF HIGH WHEAT AND LOW WOOL.

An exchange asks: "We wonder what the McKinley bill has to do with the story teller; and people up at Richfield Bost, Jack rise in the price of wheat and the fall in Springs, where he is staying just now, the price of wood?" The Cureyran like to encounter him on the hotel verthe price of wool?" The CHRONICLE andas. may be wrong but it is of the opinion that the McKinley bill has nothing to do ent rise in wheat is simply the result of a patriarch. He leads a quiet and stud-McKee, Bert with either the one or the other. The presan anticipated shortage in the aggregate wheat supply of the world. Had the products of the great wheat countries of products of the great wheat countries of and gardens. the castern hemisphere been equal, this year, to what they have been in some years that are past, wheat, today, would Frederick was very generous to her, and likely be selling in a dull market in she left behind her a large estate. The Chicago at eighty cents, instead of in a highly excited market, at $1.05 to $1.15.

And this would have been true if the name of McKinley had never been heard of The very best that protection can of. The very best that protection can do, in this regard, is to create a home market, by creating an army of consumers who are not producers of bread stuffs, and thus indirectly effect the foreign market, by the shortage of our surplus for export. This seems so plain that it army, arrived yesterday from the east, requires no argument. The law of supply and demand fixes the price abroad on Saturday, for Corea via Japan. He as well as at home. Even where protection creates a home demand the law continues to rule and fix the price. And the same law applies equally to the wool market. Shut out foreign wools that comes in competition with our home product and the price must inevitably rise, in the long run. It cannot be otherwise, never was and never will be. Supply and demand fix the price. Limit the supply by protective restriction, and the demand being equal the price must rise. This is history, not theory, fact, nor fancy. Whence then the low price of production. Preliminary returns of wool? For the simple reason that the demand is not equal to the supply and in a much lesser degree because of the stringency in the money market that shuts off speculation in wool and limits the purchase of that commodity to the actual requirements of the manufacturing trade. One consideration alone, that seems to have been very generally fora much lesser degree because of the seems to have been very generally for- average gotted by writers on this subject, fully accounts for the depression and lower prices that have ruled in the wool market during the present season. It is the well known fact that immense quantities of foreign wools and woolen manufactures were imported last fall, in anticipation of the passage of the McKinley bill. These importations have been estimated by conservative judges to be tion. The large demand for wool in the Boston market, during the past thirty days, gives assurance that manufacturers believe that prices are not likely to recede and better prices will surely come when the immense exportations of gold, that have been sent out of the country in payment for goods purchased in anticipation of the passage of the McKinley bill return in payment of our exports of wheat and other bread stuffs.

A Year of Abundance.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 .- Statistician Dodge, of the department of agriculture,

The year promises to be one of abundance in almost all lines of agricultural acreage made the wheat area about 40,-000,000 acres. On that basis the crop should not fall below 525,000,000 bushels.

The following was handed in by a friend with the request to publish it, River. says the Eugene Guard. "Mrs. Lucian they are still an important factor in the wool situation. Till this supply is used up and passes into the hands of the consumer it is unreasonable to expect the full effect of an increased tariff restriction.

"This caseful of implements which we have newly placed on exhibition is designed to show the development of the tool which we call the knife, beginning from the earliest times," said Professor Mason at the National museum. "First, you observe, is the fragment of flint, which the savage split by banging it on top with a stone hammer into a number of flakes. The smaller ones were used for arrow points and the bigger ones for knives, their edges being split off so sharp that you might almost shave with some of them. Next you see the flint inserted into a handle of split wood or bone, and as farther improvements, the fastenings of this primitive knife in the handle by the rosin of trees and by cord of one sort or another bound around to secure it. "The most beautiful knife in the collection is this exquisitely molded blade of greenish jade, belonging to the stone age, branded with a walrus tusk. You can hardly find a more admirably formed weapon among the products of modern cutlery wares. Most curious of the modern tools here is this sailor's knife, square at the end instead of pointed, to prevent stabbing in a row, or the dangerous falling of the weapon from aloft. Its blade drops out at the end of the handle when a spring is touched, so that Jack can hold a rope with one hand and open the knife for service without the need of ten fingers."-Washington

All on Account of a Hen. Twas only a little hen, with a lopped comb and a flushed face, that broke up the pastorate of an able Maine parson. She used to sneak under the fence, you know, just the way hens do always, tiptoe across the grass border with the minuet step and then the elder's garden had to take it. Of course it was aggravating. Did you ever watch a hen at this

She trips carelessly into the middle of the garden bed; she cocks her head; a careless look comes into her eye; she balances partners with a flip and a scrape to the right, a flirt and a kick to the left, a double shuffle and a grand skirt dance flourish. Then she looks for grub.

Well, that person saw the whole thing for days; same hen, same gestures, and she came in miraculously, astonishingly, through a new hole every day. Then came at length wrath and a girding of the loins; a gun, bang!-dead hen floating upon the placid breast of a river The current washed the corps upon the neighbor's strand and then the neighborhood heard the tale. The atrocity was fanned vigorously and the poor parson found that he was not to be an assassin and the leader of the parish at the same time. Therefore his farewell sermon. - Dexter Gazette.

Our Governor's Opinion on Farming. Governor Pennoyer, on his return from an outing, stopped long enough in Albany to tell a Heratd reporter that he was raised on a farm until he was 22 years of age, and once knew how to swing a cradle—in fact was a pretty good harvest hand himself. He said he believed the multiplicity of inventions in harvesting machinery, while it no doubt saves labor, does not put money in the farmer's pocket, that a man on a small farm could make more money to go back to the old way of harvesting.

They tell a good joke on a Sound statesman who was recently visiting in Spokane, Riding on the train through the night, while chatting with his fellow travelers, they were suddenly startled by an expression of amazement on the face of the visitor. First he would stare at them and then gaze with the utmost at them and then gaze with the utmost interest at some object in the sky. They rushed to the window expecting to see shooting stars or a comet, but there was nothing but the bright round orb that nightly sheds lunar refulgence on the earth. Turning to his companions, the man from the Sound said: "Gentlemen, for God's sake what is "Gentlemen, for God's sake, what is that?" Poor fellow, long years of resi-dence mid summer smoke and winter fog had caused him to forget that there was such a thing as a moon.
