Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 22, 1892.

Editor. Chronicle: It is after eleven and Fitch and I have ist returned from the Grand Opera house where we went to see the opera "Robin Hood" and it's way ahead of anything I have ever seen in that line. The music and acting were both very good. We have put in a very busy day and this morning I had the honor to occupy Senator Mitchell's seat in the sen- the way there with 11,850 boxes, and ate chamber of the United States. We had a good guide and every point of interest was shown to us. We went in every room in the capitol, after that we went to the Washington monument which is 555 feet high and made of white marble, as are all of the government buildings with the exception of the war, navy and state building which is of brown stone, then we went to the treasury building and there I saw one dropped completely out, and property feet high, which contains 93 millions of $1,000 and upwards, couldn't be given silver dollars. This is put up in sacks, away today. Business houses are half each one containing one thousand dolple are leaving by the hundreds.—Athena lars, next to this is another vault 40 feet long, 30 feet wide and 12 feet high. This holds at this time in silver and gold 83 millions. It is, however, well guarded and I could not get hold of it, and therefore you can rest easily to night as the money and country are safe.

In the same building is a Mammoth masticator which chews up daily from three to five hundred thousand dollars in old and mutilated currency. We also saw new money being made, printed and cut in bundles of 40 thousand each, and there was more than could be put into the whole building occupied by the Haight resturant in The Dalles. We also saw the battle of "Bull Run" in the Cyclorama building which was fine. This evening after dinner we went to the Corcoran art gallery which is said to be the finest collection of paintings and sculpture in the word. This was presented to the government by John W. Corcoran, ex-United States senator. Tomorrow we will attend the president's reception and go through the White House, war, navy and state buildings. Washington is the greatest place I have ever seen, the streets are about 200 feet wide exclusive of the sidewalks which are 50 feet wide each, and every street is so laid out that all avenues lead to the capitol.

Jan. 23.-Well I am tired. Have just come back from the reception at the White House and had the pleasure of shaking Yesterday the Heathen Chinee of this hands with the president, and as Fitch pretty good shape, and seems very well suited with his "Yob."

We are having elegant weather for our trin and have enjoyed it very much. Today we have been through the army, the While House, and guess that is enough for one day.

We leave for home this afternoon as Fitch must be home in the morning, but then stop as long as I want to. I rather of Col. W. E. McArthur of Washington, stopped in and the dining room is a palace. Hon. J. B. Huntington, register of the Burnes land office, has the wellfare of Eastern Oregon at heart, and is using every effort in his power to further the project of irrigation of the arid lands of this section. Mr. Huntington recently laid the matter before Senator Dolph, the letter afterwards being bubiished in the Harney Item. This letter will also have considerable weight in congress, as it presents the arid land question in its true light. He also says: "The arid lands reclaimed in Eastern Oregon can-not be missed from the hundreds of thousands of acres which still lie open awaiting some process of redemption, which will surely come to them sooner or later through the inevitable results of human energy."—John Day Sentinel.
